Some stern untutor'd churl, and noble stock
Was graft with crab-tree slip, whose fruit thou art. Shakespeare.

Trees are apparelled with flowers or herbs by boring holes in their bodies, and putting into them earth holpen with muck, and setting seeds or slips of violets in the earth. Bacon.

So have I seen some tender slip,
Sav'd with care from winter's nip,
The pride of her exaration train,
Pluck'd up by some unready swain. Milton.

They are propagated not only by the seed, but many also by the root, and some by slips or cuttings. Reyn.

4. A leash or string in which a dog is held, from its being so made as to slip or become loose by relaxation of the hand.

I see you stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the start. Shakespeare.

God is said to harden the heart persuasively, but not operatively, nor effectively; as he who only lets loose a greyhound out of the slip, is said to hound him at the hare. Bramhall.

5. An escape; a desertion. I know not whether to give the slip be not originally taken from a dog, that runs and leaves the string or slip in the leader's hand.

The higher they are raised, the giddier they are;
 the more slippery is their standing, and the deeper their fall. L'Estrange.

The highest hill is the most slippery place,
 And fortune rocks us with a smiling face. Denham.
 Beauty, like ice, our footing does betray;
 Who can tread sure on the smooth slippery way? Dryden.

3. Hard to hold; hard to keep.
 Thus surely bound, yet be not overbold,
 The slippery god will try to loose his hold;
 And various forms assume, to cheat thy sight,
 And with vain images of beauty's adroit. Dryden.

4. Not standing firm.
 When they fall, as being slippery standers,
 The love that leag'd on them, as slippery too,
 Doth one pluck down another, and together
 Die in the dust. Shakespeare.

5. Uncertain; changeable; mutable; instable.
 Oh world, thy slippery turns! Friends now fast sworn,
 Whose double bosoms seem to wear one heart,
 Whose hours, whose bed, whose meal and exercise,
 Are still together; who twine, as 'twere, in love inseparable, shall within this hour,
 On a dissolution of a dole, break out
 To bitterest enmity. Shakespeare.

He looking down
 With scorn or pity on the slippery state
 Of kings, will tread upon the neck of late. Denham.

 death, or some notorious mark, by slitting the nose, or brands upon the cheeks. Temple.

If a turned or plated body, which, being of an even thickness, appears all over of an uniform colour, should be slit into thin slices, or broken into fragments of the same thickness with the plate, I see no reason why every thread or fragment should not keep its colour. Newton.

He took a streak
 To slit my tongue, and make me speak. Swift.
SLIT, n. f. [Hebrew, Saxon.] A long cut, or narrow opening.

In St. James's fields is a conduit of brick, into which joineth a low vault, and at the end of that a round house of stone; and in the brick conduit there is a window, and in the round house a slit or rift of some little breadth; if you cry out in the rift, it will make a fearful roaring at the window.
Bacon.

Where the tender rinds of trees disclose
 Their shooting gems, a swelling knot there grows:
 Jull in that place a narrow slit we make,
 Then other buds from bearing trees we take;
 Interred thus, the wounded rind we close. Dryden.

I found, by looking through a slit or oblong hole, which was narrower than the pupil of my eye, and held close to it parallel to the prism, I could see the circles much distincter, and visible to a far greater number, than otherwise. Newton.

 Be thankful. Dryden.

SLOP, n. f. [Hebrew, Saxon; slorre, Dutch, a covering.] Trowlers; open breeches.

What said Mr. Dumbledon about the Latin in my short cloak and slops. Shakespeare.

SLOPE, adj. [This word is not derived from any satisfactory original. Junius omits it: Skinner derives it from slap, lax, Dutch; and derives it from the curve of a loose rope. Perhaps its original may be latent in loopen, Dutch, to run, slope being easy to the runner.] Oblique; not perpendicular. It is generally used of acclivity or declivity, forming an angle greater or less with the plane of the horizon.

Where there is a greater quantity of water, and space enough, the water moveth with a slope rate

Murm'ring waters fall
 Down the slope hills, dispers'd, or in a lake,
 That to the fringed bank with myrtle crown'd
 Her apical mirror holds, unite their streams. Milton.

SLOPE, n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. An oblique direction; any thing obliquely directed.

2. Declivity; ground cut or formed with declivity.

Growing upon slopes is caused for that moth, as it cometh of moisture, so the water must but slide, not be in a pool. Bacon.

My lord advances with majestic mien,
 And when upon steep slopes you've dragg'd your

Just at his study door he'll bless your eyes. Pope.

lazily; with slowness.

SLOTHFULNESS. n. f. [from slowness.]
Idleness; laziness; sluggishness; inactivity.

To trust to labour without prayer, argueth impiety and prophaneness; it maketh light of the providence of God; and although it be not the intent of a religious mind, yet it is the fault of those men whose religion wanteth light of a mature judgment to direct it, when we join with our prayer slowness, and neglect of convenient labour. Hooker.
Slowness casteth into a drowsy sleep, and an idle soul shall suffer hunger. Proverbs.

SLOUCH. n. f. [slough; Danish, stupid.]

1. A downcast look; a depression of the head. In Scotland, an ungainly gait, as also the person whose gait it is.

cently negligent of cleanliness; a man dirtily dressed.

The ministers came to church in handsome holiday apparel, and that himself did not think them bound by the law of God to go like slovens. Hooker.

Affect in things about thee cleanliness,
That all may gladly boast thee as a lowly;
Slaves take up their flock of noisomeness Beforehand, and anticipate their last hour. Herbert.

You laugh, half beard, half slowness, at I stand;
My wig half powder, and all tuff my hand. Pope.

Their methods various, but alike their aim;
The slowness and the fopling are the same. Young.

SLOVENLINESS. n. f. [from slowness.] In-decient negligence of dress; neglect of cleanliness.

Slowness is the worst sign of a hard heart, and civility the best exercise of the reins; yet not to be exact in the phrase of compliment, or gestures of courtesy. Hutton.

SLOVENLY. adj. [from slowness.] Negligent of dress; negligent of neatness; not neat; not cleanly.

And time hath worn us into slowness. Shakespeare.

SLOUGH. n. f. [slough; Saxon.]

1. A deep miry place; a hole full of dirt.

The Scots were in a fallow field, whereto the English could not enter, but over a cross ditch and a slough; in passing whereto many of the English horse were plung'd, and some kill'd. Hagyard.

The way being bad, twenty to one
He's here stuck in a slough, and overthrow'd. Milt.

A cutter had laid his waggon fast in a slough.
L'Estrange.

2. The skin which a serpent casts off at his periodical renovation.

Thy fates open their hands, let thy blood and spirit embrace them, and to mine thyself to what thou art like to be, cast thy humble slough, and

When the mind is quicken'd
The organs, though defunct and dead before,
Break up their dusty grave, and newly move,
With enter'd slough, and fresh legency. Shakespeare.

Oh let not sleep my closing eyes invade
In open plains, or in the secret shade,
When he, renew'd in all the speckled pride
Of pompous youth, has cast his slough aside,
And in his summer hoary rolls along Ereft, and brandishing his forked tongue. Dryden.

The slough of an English viper, that is, the cuticula, they cast off twice every year, in spring and fall, the separation begins at the head, and is finished in twenty-four hours. Greene.

The body, which we leave behind in this visible world, is as the womb or slough from whence we issue, and are born into the other. Greene.

3. It is used by Shakespeare simply for the skin.

As the snake, roll'd in a flow'ry bank,
With flaming checker'd slough, doth tug a child,
That for the beauty thinks it excellent. Henry vi.

4. The part that separates from a soul fore.

At the next dressing I found a slough come away with the dressings which was the fester. Wife.

SLOW, in composition, is an adverb
slowly.
This slow-pac'd soul, which late did cleave
T' a body, and went but, by the body's leave,
Twenty perchance or thirty mile a day,
Dispatches in a minute all the way
Twixt heav'n and earth. Dante
To the flame of slow endeavouring art
Thy easy numbers slow. Milton
This day's death denounc'd, if aught I see,
Will prove no sudden but a slow-pac'd evil,
A long day's dying to augment our pain. Milton
For eight slow-circling years by tempests told.
Pope
Some demon urg'd
T' explore the fraud with guile oppos'd to guile,
Slow-pacing thence around th' insidious pile. Pope
TO SLOW. v. a. [from the adjective.] To omit by dilatoriness; to delay; to procrastinate. Not in use. The true word was forflow.
Now do you know the reason of this haste?
---I would I knew not why it should be slow.
SHAKESPEARE
SLOWLY. adv. [from slow.]
1. Not speedily; not with celerity; not with velocity.
The gnome rejoicing bears her gift away,
Spreads his black wings, and slowly mounts to day.
Pope
2. Not soon; not early; not in a little time.
The poor remnant of human feed peopled the country again slowly, by little and little. Pope
Our fathers bent their painful industry
To check a monarchy that slowly grew,
But did not France or Holland's late slow. Dryden
Whole rising pow'r to swift dominion slow.
We oft our slowly growing works impart,
While images reflect from art to art. Pope
3. Not hastily; not rashly; as, he determines slowly.
4. Not promptly; not readily; as, he learns slowly.
5. Tardily; sluggishly.
The chapel of St. Laurence advances to wit slowly, that 'tis not impossible but the faculty of Medicines may be extract before their brand slow is finished. Adams SLOWNESS. n. f. [from slow.]
1. Smallness of motion; not speed, want of velocity; absence of celerity or swif-tiness.
Providence hath confined these human beings that what any invention hath in the strengthening motion, is abated in the slowness of it, and what hath in the extraordinary quickness of its motion must be allowed for in the great strength that is required unto it. Hutton Motion is the absolute mode of a body, but swif-tiness or slowness are relative ideas. Watts
2. Length of time in which any thing is or is brought to pass; not quickness.

Tyrants use what art they can to increase the Hooker.

Dulness to admit conviction or affection.

Chink would not heal their infirmities, because of the hardness and stoutness of their hearts, in that they believed him not.

Want of promptness; want of readiness.

Deliberation; cool delay.

Dilatation; procrastination.

LOWWORM. n. f. [lappyn, Saxon.] The blind worm; a large viper, not mortal, scarcely venomous.

Though we have found formed snakes in the belly of the earth, or flourworm, yet may the viper emphatically bear the name.

TO SLUMBER. v. a. [probably from lubb- ber.]

To do any thing lazily, imperfectly, or with idle hurry.

Nature showed the doth not like men who slub-
ber up matters of mean account.

As I return: he answer'd, do not so,
 slumber not business for my sake.

As they are slumbered over, the malignity that means will show itself in some chronic disease.

To slub; to daub. [This seems to be from slubber, slabber, or slaver.]

You must be content to slubber the glofs of your new fortunes with this more slubborn and boisterous expedition.

To cover coarsely or carelessly. This is now not in use, otherwise than as a low colloquial word.

A man of secret ambitious ends, and proportionate compels, smothered under the habit of a scholar, and slubbed over with a certain rude and clownish fashion, that had the semblance of integrity.

SLUMBERDREGGILLION. n. f. [I suppose a cant word without derivation.] A paltry, dirty, sorry wretch.

Quoth she, although thou hast deserv'd,
 But slumber thy glory, to be fair'd
 Ar thou dost vow to deal with me,
 Ar thou hast got the victory.

SLUDGE. n. f. [I suppose from flug, flough, Saxon.] Mire; dirt mixed with water.

The earth I made a mere soft sludge or mud.

SLUG. n. f. [slug, Danish, and fluck, Dutch, heavy a glutton, and thence one that has the flesh of a glutton.]

An idler, a drone; a slow, heavy, sleepy, lazy wretch.

He's what a slug is Hastings, that he comes not!

A hinderance; an obstruction.

Many dills and dumps all improvements, Whom money would be tiring, if it were not for a slug.

A kind of slow creeping snail.

[slug, a hammerhead, Sax.] A cylindrical or oval piece of metal shot from a gun.

When fractures are made with bullets or slugs,
 the scapula and cranium are driven in together.

As, forc'd from wind-guns, lead itself can fly,
 And pointous slugs cut swiftly through the sky.

To SLUG. v. n. [from the noun.] To be idle; to play the drone; to move
 slowly.

All he did was to deceive good knights,
 And draw them from pursuit of praise and fame,
 To slug in sloth and sensual delights.

And end their days with irrequiescent shame.

He lay not all night slugging in a cabin under his mantle, but used commonly to keep others waking to defend their lives.

One went slugging on with a thousand cares.

SLUGGARD. n. f. [from slug.] An idler;
 a drone; an inactive lazy fellow.

Cry mercy, lords, and watchful gentlemen,
 That you have taken a tardy sluggard here.

This mightier found shall make
 The dead to rise,

And open tombs and open eyes,
 To the long sluggars of five thousand years.

Up, up, says Avarice; thou snor'st again,
 Stretch best thy limbs, and yawn't, but all in vain:

The tyrant Lucie no deadn takes;
 At his command th' unwilling sluggard wakes.

Sprightly May commands our youth to keep The vigils of her night, and breaks their sluggard
 sleep.

To SLUGGARDIZE. v. a. [from sluggard.]

To make idle; to make drowsy.

Rather see the wonders of the world abroad,
 Than, living dully sluggardiz'd at home,

Wear out thy youth with shapeless idleness.

SLUGGISH. adj. [from slug.] Dull; drowsy; lazy; slothful; idle; insipid; slow; inactive; inert.

Sluggish idleness, the nurse of sin,
 Upon a slothful sits he chole to ride.

The dull billows, thick as troubled mire,
 Whom neither wind out of their feat could force,
 Nor tides did drive out of their sluggish source.

One, bolder than the rest,
 With his broad sword provok'd the sluggish beast.

Matter, being impotent, sluggish, and inactive, hath no power to stir or move itself.

SLUGGISHLY. adv. [from sluggish.]

Dully; not nimbly; lazily; idly;
 slowly.

SLUGGISHNESS. n. f. [from sluggish.]

Dulness; sloth; laziness; idleness; in-ertness.

The most of mankind are inclined by her flatter, if they would take the pains; no less than birds to fly, and horses to run, which if they lose, it is through their own sluggishness, and by that means become her prodigies, not her children.

It is of great moment to teach the mind to shake off its sluggishness, and vigorously employ itself about what is soon shall direct.

SLUCE. n. f. [slugge, Dutch; elufse, Fr.
selva, Italian.] A watergate; a flood-gate; a vent for water.

Two other precious drops, that ready flood
 Feth in their crystal sluces, be, ere they fell,
 Kiss'd, as the gracious signs of sweet remorse,
 And pious awe, that fear'd to have offended.

Divine Alphons, who, by secret sluces,
 Stole under seas to meet his Archduke.

If we receive them all, they were more than seven, if only the natural sluces, they were fewer.

As waters from her sluces, flow'd Unbounded sorrow from her eyes.

Each sluce of affluent fortune open'd soon,
 And wealth flow'd in at morning, night, and noon.

To SLUCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To emit by floodgates.

Take a traitor coward, Stale'd out his innocent soul through streams of blood.

Veins of liquid ore sluc'd from the lake.

You wrong me, if you think I'll sell one drop Within these veins for pageants; but let honour

Call for my blood, I'll sluce it into streams;
 Turn fortune loose again to my pursuit,
 And let me hunt her through embattled foes.

In dusty plains; there will I be the first.

SLUCE. adj. [from sluce.] Falling in streams as from a sluice or floodgate.

And oft whole sheets descend of slucey rain,
 Suck'd by the spring clouds from out the main:

The lofty skies at once come pouring down,
 The promis'd crop and golden labours drows.

To SLUMBER. v. n. [slumman, Saxon;
sluymeren, Dutch.]

1. To sleep lightly; to be not awake, nor in profound sleep.

He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep.

Conscience wakes despair that slumber'd.

2. To sleep; to repose. Sleep and slumber are often confounded.

God speaketh yet man perceiveth it not: in a dream, in a vision of the night, when deep sleep falleth upon men, in slumberings upon the bed.

Have ye chosen this place,
 After the toil of battle, to repose
 Your wearied virtue, for the use you find
 To slumber here?

3. To be in a state of negligence and su-pineness.

Why slumber Pope, who leads the tuneful train,
 Nor heeds that virtue which he loves complain?

To SLUMBER. v. a.

1. To lay to sleep.

2. To stupify; to stun.

Then up he took the slumber'd senseless corse,
 And, ere he could out of his swoon awake,
 Him to his castle brought.

To honest a deed after it was done, or to slumber his conscience in the doing, he studied other means to save.

SLUMBER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Light sleep; sleep not profound.

And for his dreams, I wonder he's to fond
 To trust the mockery of unquiet slumbers.

From care's shock it shall fall into slumber, and from a slumber it shall tattle into a deep and long sleep, till at last, perhaps, it shall sleep itself into a change, and that such an one, that nothing but hell and judgment shall awaken it.

Labour and rest, that equal periods keep;
 Obdurate slumbers that can wake and weep.

2. Sleep; repose.

Boy! I am not! I'll sleep! It is no matter;
 Enjoy the heavy heavy dew of slumber.

Ev'n lust and envy sleep, but love denies Rest to my soul, and slumbers to my eyes

Three days I promis'd to attend my doom,
 And two long days and nights are yet to come.

SLUMBEROUS. } adj. [from slumber.]

SLUMBERY. } 1. Inviting to sleep; soporiferous; causing sleep.

The timely dew of sleep,
 Now falling with soft slumberous weight, inclines
 Our eyelids.

While pensive in the silent slumberous shade,
 Sleep's gentle power her drooping eyes invades;

Minerva, like like, on embosomed air
 Impres'd the form of Iphigenia.

There every eye with slumberous chains the-bound,

And dash'd the flowing goblets to the ground.

2. Sleepy; not waking.

A great perturbation in nature! to receive at once the benefit of sleep, and do the effects of watching: in this slumbery agitation, what have you heard her say?

SLUNE. The pret. and part. pass. of slung.

SLUNK. The pret. and part. pass. of slunk.

Silence accompany'd; for beast, and bird,
They to their gruffy couch, these to their nests,
Were sunk. Milton.

To SLUR. v. a. [flourig, Dutch, nasty;
floore, a flut.]

1. To fully; to foil; to contaminate.
2. To pals lightly; to balk; to misf.

The atheists laugh in their sleeves, and not a little triumph, to see the cause of them thus betrayed by its professed friends, and the grand argument flurried by them, and so their work done to their hands. Cudworth.

Studious to please the genius of the times,
With periods, points, and tropes, he flurs his crimes;
He robb'd not, but he borrow'd from the poor,
And took but with intention to restore. Dryden.

3. To cheat; to trick.
- What was the publick faith found out for,
But to flur men of what they fought for? Hudibras.

Come, seven 's the main,
Cries Gaunyede: the usual trick:
Seven, flur a six; eleven, a tick. Prior.

SLUR. n. f. [from the verb.] Faint reproach;
slight disgrace.

Here is an ape made a king for slurring tricks;
and the fox is then to put a flur upon him, in exposing him for sport to the scorn of the people. L'Estrange.

No one can rely upon such an one, either with safety to his affairs, or without a flur to his reputation; since he that trusts a knave has no other recompence but to be accounted a fool for his pains. South.

SLUT. n. f. [flodde, Dutch.]

1. A dirty woman.
- Cricket, to Windor chimnies shalt thou leap:
Where fires thou find'st unrak'd, and hearths unswept,
There pinch the maids as blue as bilberry;
Our radiant queen hates fluts and sluttery. Shakespeare

The veal's all rag, the butter's turn'd to oil;
And thus I buy good meat for fluts to spoil. King.

2. A word of slight contempt to a woman.

Hold up, you fluts,
Your aprons mountant; you're not outshinable,
Although I know you'll swear. Shakespeare.
The frogs were ready to leap out of their skins for joy, till one crafty old flut in the company advised them to consider a little better on't. L'Estrange.

SLUTTERY. n. f. [from flut.] The qualities or practice of a flut.

Slutt'ry, to such neat excellence oppos'd,
Should make desire vomit emptiness. Shakespeare.
These make our girls their slutt'ry rue,
By pinching them both black and blue;
And put a penny in their shoe,
The house for cleanly sweeping. Drayton.

A man gave money for a black, upon an opinion that his swarthy colour was rather slutt'ry than nature, and the fault of his master that kept him no cleaner. L'Estrange.

SLUTTRISH. adj. [from flut.]

1. Nasty; not nice; not cleanly; dirty; indecently negligent of cleanliness.

All preparations both for food and lodging, such as would make one detail niggardness, it is to sluttish a vice. Sidney.

Albeit the mariners do covert store of cabins, yet indeed they are but sluttish dens that breed sickness in peace, serving to cover stealth, and in light are dangerous to tear men with their splinters. Raleigh.

The nastiness of that nation, and sluttish course of life, hath much promoted the opinion, occasioned by their servile condition at first, and inferior ways of parsimony ever since. Brown.

Slothful disorder fill'd his stable,
And sluttish plenty deck'd her table. Prior.

2. It is used sometimes for meretricious.

She got a legacy by sluttish tricks. Holiday.

The curled whirlpools suck, smack, and embrace,
Yet drown them. Donne.

2. To make to emit any quick smart noise.

More than one steel naut Deha's empire feel;
Who sits triumphant o'er the flying wheel;
And, as the gaudiest through th' admiring throng,
With what an air the smacks the silken throng! Young.

SMACK. n. f. [smack, Dutch; from the verb.]

1. Taste; flavour.
2. Tincture; quality from something mixed.

The child, that sucketh the milk of the nurse, learns his first speech of her; the which, being the first inured to his tongue, is ever after most pleasing unto him; inasmuch, that though he afterwards be taught English, yet the smack of the first will always abide with him. Speyer.

Our lordship, though not clean past your youth, hath yet some smack of age in you, some relish of the saltiness of time, and have a cure of your health. Shakespeare.

It caused the neighbours to rue, that a petty smack only of popery opened a gap to the oppression of the whole. Carew.

As the Pythagorean soul
Runs through all beasts, and fish, and fowl,
And has a smack of every one,
So love does, and has ever done. Hudibras.

Dryden.

4. Acute; witty.

It was a smart reply that Augustus made to one that ministered this comfort of the fatality of things, this was to far from giving any ease to his mind, that it was the very thing that troubled him. Tillotson.

5. Brisk; vivacious; lively.

You may see a smart rhetorician turning his hat in his hands, during the whole course of his baranguer. A deaf man would think he was cheapening a beaver. Addison.

Who, for the poor renown of being smart,
Would leave a sting within a brother's heart? Young.

SMART. n. f. A fellow affecting briskness and vivacity. A cant word.

SMARTLY. adv. [from smart.] After a smart manner; sharply; briskly; vigorously; wittily.

The art, order, and gravity of those proceedings, where short, severe, constant rules were set, and smartly pursued, made them less taken notice of. Clarendon.

SMARTNESS. n. f. [from smart.]

1. The quality of being smart; quickness; vigour.

What interest such a smartness in striking the air hath in the production of sound, may in some measure appear by the motion of a bullet, and that of a twitche or other wand, which produce no sound, if they do but slowly pass through the air; whereas, if the one do swiftly strike the air, and the other be shot out of a gun, the celerity of their percussions on the air puts it into an undulating motion, which, reaching the ear, produces an audible noise. Boyle.

2. Liveliness; briskness; wittiness.

I defy all the clubs to invent a new phrase, equal in wit, humour, smartness, or politeness, to my let.
Swift.

SMATCH. n. f. [corrupted from smack.]

1. Taste; tincture; twang.

Thou art a fellow of a good respect;
Thy life hath had some smatch of honour in 't.
Shakespeare.

Some nations have a peculiar guttural or nasal
smatch in their language. Holder.

These salts have somewhat of a nitrous taste, but mixt with a smatch of a vitriolick. Gray.

2. [carulco, Latin.] A bird.

TO SMARTER. v. n. [It is supposed to be corrupted from smack or taple.]

1. To have a slight taste; to have a slight, superficial, and imperfect knowledge.

Such a practice gives a slight smattering of several sciences, without any solid knowledge. Watts.

Since, by a little smattering in learning, and great conceit of himself, he has lost his religion, may he find it again by harder study and an humbler mind. Bentley.

2. To talk superficially or ignorantly.

In proper terms, such as men smatter,
Whenthey throw out and mis the matter. Hudibras.

Of state affairs you cannot smatter;
Are awkward when you try to smatter. Swift.

SMARTER. n. f. [from the verb.] Superficial or slight knowledge.

All other sciences were extinguished during this empire, excepting only a smatter of judicial astrology. Temple.

SMARTERER. n. f. [from smatter.] One who has a slight or superficial knowledge.

These few who preserve any rudiments of learning, are, except one or two smatterers, the clergy's friends. Swift.

TO SMEAR. v. a. [from smear, Saxon; smeeren, Dutch.]

1. To overspread with something viscous and adhesive; to besmear.

If any such be here, that love this painting,
Wherein you see me smear'd,
If any think brave death outweighs bad life,
Let him wave thus. Shakespeare.

Then from the mountain hewing timber tall,
Began to build a vessel of huge bulk,
Smear'd round with pitch. Milton.

Smear'd as the was with black Gorgonian blood,
The Fury sprung above the Stygian flood. Dryden.

2. To soil; to contaminate.

Why had I not, with charitable hand,
Took up a beggar's issue at my gates?
Who smear'd thus and mard with infamy,
I might have said no part of it is mine. Shakespeare.

SMEAR. n. f. [from the verb.] An ointment; any fat liquor or juice.

SMEARY. adj. [from smear.] Daulhy;
adhesive.

A smear foam works o'er my grinding jaws,
And utmost anguish shakes my lab'ring frame. Rowe.

Saxon.] To smoke; to blacken with smoke. Not in use.

SMEGMATICK. adj. [σμήγμα.] Soapy; deterfive.

TO SMELL. v. a. pret. and part. smelt.
[Of this word the etymology is very obscure. Skinner, the most acute of all etymologists, derives it from smoel, warm, Dutch; because smells are increased by heat.]

1. To perceive by the nose.

Their neighbours hear the same music, or smell
the same perfumes with themselves; for here is enough. Collier.

2. To find out by mental sagacity.

The horse smelt him out, and presently a croquet came in his head how to countermine him. L'Orange.

TO SMELL. v. n.

1. To strike the nostrils.

The king is but a man as I am: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions. Shakespeare.

The daintiest smells of flowers are out of those plants whose leaves smell not. Bacon.

2. To have any particular scent; with of.

Honey in Spain smelleth apparently of the scent of orange, from whence the bee gathereth
it. Bacon.

A work of this nature is not to be performed upon one leg, and should smell of oil in duly handled. Brown.

If you have a silver saucepan, and the butter
smells of smoke, lay the fault upon the coals. Meff.

3. To have a particular tincture or smack of any quality.

My untutored name, the sufferings of my life,
Will to your recollection overweigh,
That you shall smell in your own report,
And smell of calumny. Shakespeare.

A man to smell of the people's lee,
The court receiveth him first for civility. Dryden.

4. To practise the act of smelling.

Whoever shall make like unto that, to smell thereto, shall be cut off. Esau.

I had a mind to know, whether they would find out the treasure, and whether smelling enabled them to know what is good for their nourishment.

5. To exercise sagacity.

Down with the nose, take the bridge quite away.
Of him that, his particular to suspend,
Smells from the general weal.

SMELL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Power of smelling; the sense of which the nose is the organ.

Next, in the nostrils the doth use the smell,
As God the breath of life in them did give:
So makes he now this power in them to dwell,
To judge all airs whereby we breathe and live.
Davies.

2. Scent; power of affecting the nose.

The sweetest smell in the air is the white double violet, which comes twice a year.
Bacon.
All sweet smells have joined with them some earthy or crude odours.
Bacon.
Pleasant smells are not confined unto vegetables,
but found in divers animals.
Brown.

There is a great variety of smells, though we have but a few names for them, the smell of a violet and of musk, both sweet, are as distinct as any two smells.
Lake.

SMELLER. n. f. [from smell.] He who smells.

SMELLFEAST. n. f. [smell and feast.] A parasite; one who haunts good tables.

The ant lives upon her own, honestly gotten, whereas the fly is an intruder, and a common smellfeast, that sponges upon other people's trenchers.
Strange.

The smelters come up to the assayers.
Woodward.
To SMERK. v. a. [smerecian, Saxon.] To smile wantonly.

Certain gentlemen of the gown, whose awkward, spruce, prim, sneering, and smirking countenances have got good preferment by force of cringing.
Swift.

SMERRY or SMIRK. adj. Nice; smart; jaunty.

Smell, how bragg yon bullock bears,
So smark, so smooth, his pricked ears?
His horns been as brags as rainbow bent,
His dew-lap as lush as lufs of Kent.

SMERLIN. n. f. [cobitis aculeata.] A fish.

SMICKET. n. f. [diminutive of smock; smocket, smicket.] The under garment of a woman.

To SMIGHT, for smite.

As when a griffin, seized of his prey,
A dragon fierce encountereth in his flight,
Through widest air making his idle way,
That would his rightful ravin rend away;
With hideous horror both together smight,
And force so sore that they the heavens affray.
Fairy Queen.

To SMILE. v. n. [smuylen, Dutch.]

1. To contract the face with pleasure; to express kindness, love, or gladness, by the countenance: contrary to frown.

The crested basilisk and speckled snake.
Pope.

She smil'd to see the doughty hero slain;
But, at her smile, the beau reviv'd again.
Pope.

But when her anxious lord return'd,
Rais'd his head; her eyes are dry'd:
She smiles as William ne'er had mourn'd,
She looks as Mary ne'er had died.
Prior.

2. To express slight contempt by the look.

Our king replied, which some will smile at now,
but according to the learning of that time.
Camden.
Should some more sober critic come abroad,
If wrong, I smile, it right, I kiss the rod.
Pope.

'Twas what I said to Crags and Child,
Who prais'd my modesty, and smil'd.
Pope.

3. To look gay or joyous.

Let their heels enrich their time
With smiling plenty and fair prosperous days.
Shakespeare.

For see the morn,
Unconcern'd with our unrest, begins
Her rosy progress smiling.
Milton.

All things smil'd,
Birds on the branches warbling.
Milton.

The river of bliss through midst of heaven
Rolls o'er Elysian flows in a amber stream;
With their, that never fade, the spirits elect
Bind their resplendent crowns with beams,
Now in loose garlands thick thrown off, the bright
Pavement, that like a sea of paper shone,
Impurpled with celestial roses smil'd.
Milton.

The desert smil'd,
And paradise was open'd in the wild.
Pope.

4. To be favourable; to be propitious.

Then let me not let pass Occasion, which now smiles.
Milton.

Me all too mean for such a task I weat;
Yet, if the low reign lady deigns to smile,
I'll follow Storage with nuptious heat,
And clothe the vermin Spenser's native style.

SMILE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A slight contraction of the face; a look of pleasure or kindness: opposed to frown.

I frown upon him, yet he loves me still — skill.

Shakespeare.

No man marks the narrow space
'Tis a prison and a smile.
Wotton.

To these that sober race of men, whose lives
Religious titled them the sons of God,
Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame
Ignobly to the twins and to the smiles.
Milton.

Sweet intercourse
Of looks and smiles: for smiles from reason flow,
To brute denied, and are of love the food.
Milton.

2. Gay or joyous appearance.

Yet what avail her unexhausted stores,
Her blooming mountains, and her sunny shores,
With all the gifts that heav'n and earth impart,
The smiles of nature, and the charms of art?
Addison.

SMILINGLY. adv. [from smiling.] With a look of pleasure.

His flaw'd heart,
Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,
Burst smilingly.

He is born with teeth!
And so I was; which plainly signified
That I should snarl, and bite, and play the dog.
Shaksp.

Now, for the bare-pick'd bone of majesty,
Doth dogged war bristle his angry crest,
And snarls in the gentle eyes of peace. Shaksp.
The ties even of the savage herd are safe;
All, when they snarl or bite, have no return
But courtship from the male. Dryden.

An angry car
Starts while he feeds. Dryden and Lee.
2. To speak roughly; to talk in rude terms.

'Tis malicious and unmanly to snarl at the little lapses of a pen, from which Virgil himself stands not exempted. Dryden.

The honest farmer and his wife,
Two years declin'd from prime of life,
Had struggled with the marriage noose,
As almost every couple does:
Sometimes my plague! sometimes my darling!
Kissing to-day, to-morrow snarling. Prior.

Where hast thou been snarling odious truths, and entertaining company with discourse of their diseases? Congreve.

snast; but then it made the snast big and long, and burnt darkly, and the candle wasted in half the time of the wax pure. Bacon.

To SNATCH. v. a. [snacken, Dutch.]
1. To seize any thing hastily.

A virtuous mind should rather wish to depart this world with a kind of respectable dissolution, than to be suddenly cut off in a moment; rather to be taken than snatched away from the face of the earth. Hooker.

Death,
So snatch'd, will not exempt us from the pain.
Milton.

Life's dream hurries all too fast:
In vain fedate reflections we would make,
When half our knowledge we must snatch, not take.
Pope.

She snatch'd a sheet of Thulo from her bed:
Sudden she flies, and whelms it o'er the pyre;
Down sink the flames. Pope.

They, sailing down the stream,

To SNEEK. v. n. [Hebrew, Saxon; saige, Danish.]

1. To creep sily; to come or go as if afraid to be seen.

Once the eagle, England, being in prey,
To her unguarded nest the weazel, Scot,
Came sneaking, and so sucks her princely eggs.
Shaksp.

Sneak not away, fir; for the friar and you Must have a word anon: lay hold on him. Shaksp.

Discover'd, and defeated of your prey,
You skulk'd behind the fence, and sneak'd away.
Dryden.

I ought not to turn my back, and to sneak off in silence, and leave the truth to be baffled, bleeding, and slain. Watts.

He sneak'd into the grave,
A monarch's half, and half a harlot's slave.
Dunciad.

Are you all ready? Here's your mask here:
Author, sneak off; we'll tickle you, my dear.
More.

2. To behave with meanness and servility;
to crouch; to truckle.
I need salute no great man's threshold, sneak to none of his friends to speak a good word for me to my confederate. South.

Nothing can support minds drooping and sneak- ing, and inwardly reproaching them, from a sense of their own guilt, but to see others as bad. South.

When interest calls off all her sneaking train.
When all the oblig'd desert, and all the vain,
She waits, or to the scaffold, or the cell,
When the last living friend has bid farewell. Pope.

Tom struts a soldier, open, bold, and brave;
Will sneaks a scrivener, an exceeding knave. Pope.

SNEAKER. n. f. A small vessel of drink.
I have just let the right worshipping and his magnitudous about a sneaker of five gallons. Spectator.

SNEAKING. participial adj. [from sneak.]
1. Servile; mean; low.

When the smart dialogue grows rich,
With sneaking dog, and ugly bitch. Rowe.

2. Covetous; niggardly; meanly parsimonious.

SNEAKINGLY. adv. [from sneaking.]
1. Meanly; servilely.
Do all things like a man, not sneakingly. Herbert.

Think the king sees thee still.
While you sneakingly submit,
And beg our pardon at our feet,
Discourag'd by your guilty fears
To hope for quarter for your ears. Hudn.

2. In a covetous manner.
SNEAKINESS. n. f. [from sneaking.]
1. Niggardliness.

2. Meanness; pitifulness.

SNEAKUP. n. f. [from snark.] A cowardly creeping, insidious scoundrel. Obsolete.

The prince is a jack, a sneakup, and it he was here, I would cudgel him like a dog, it he was a boy. Shaksp.

To SNEAP. v. a. [This word seems a corruption of snub, or of snap, to reprimand.
Perhaps snap is in that sense from snubbe, Danish.
Men shulde him snubbe bitterly. Chaucer.

1. To reprimand; to check.
2. To nip.

What may Breed upon our absence, may there blow
No sneaping winds at home. Shaksp.

SNEAP. n. f. [from the verb.] A reprimand; a check.

My lord, I will not undergo this sneap without reply: you call honourable boldness impudentness: if a man will count'ry and lay out his he is virtuous. Shaksp.

To SNEB. v. a. [properly to snub. See
SNEAP.] To check; to chide; to reprimand.

Which made this foolish briar wax so bold,
That at a time he call him to himself
And snubbe the good oak, for he was old. Spectator.

To SNEER. v. n. [This word is apparently of the same family with snare and snout.]

1. To show contempt by looks; nasal;
pendere adunco.

2. To insinuate contempt by covert expressions.

The wolf was by, and the fox in a sneering way advised him not to irritate a prince against his jects. L'Estrange.

I could be content to be a little sneered at in a line, for the sake of the pleasure I should have in reading the rest. Prior.

If there has been any thing expressed with too much severity, it will fall upon those sneering at during writers of the age against religion, who have left reason and decency. Watts.

3. To utter with grimace.
I have not been sneering fulsome lies, and narrow flattery, at a little tawdry whore. Congreve.

4. To show awkward mirth.
I had no power over one muscle in their faces, though they sneered at every word spoken by each other. L'Estrange.

SNEER. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A look of contemptuous ridicule.

Did not the snare of more impartial robes
At seals and virtues' balance all eyes? Pope.

8. An expression of ludicrous scorn.
Socrates or Caesar might have a fool's coat clapt upon them, and in this disguise neither the wisdom of the one, nor the majesty of the other, could secure them from a snare. Warton.

9. SNERRER. n. f. [from snare.] He that sneers or shows contempt.

To SNEEZE. v. n. [meran, Saxon; snejen, Dutch.] To emit wind audibly
by the nose.

It may be about to sneeze, rubbing the eyes till tears run will prevent it; for that the humour devoting to the nostrils is diverted to the eyes.

Bacon.
If the pain be more intense and deeper within,
through the membranes, there will be an itching
in the palate and nostrils, with frequent sneezing.
Wifeman.

To thee Cupid sneer'd aloud;
And every lucky onen tent before,
To meet the landing on the Spartan shore. Dryden.
If any thing offends the head, it hath a power to free itself by sneezing. Ray.

Violent sneezing produceth convulsions in all the muscles of respiration; so great an alteration can be produced only by the tickling of a feather; and if the action of sneezing should be continued by some very acrid substance, it will produce headache, universal convulsions, fever, and death. Arbuthnot.
Another put the sharp end of his half pipe a good way up into my nostril, which tickled my nose like a straw, and made me sneeze violently.

Swift.
SNEEZE. n. f. [from the verb.] Emission of wind audibly by the nose.

I heard the rack,
As earth and sky would mingle; but True slaves, though mortals fear them,
Are conscious to the pillar'd frame of heav'n,
And to the man's whole frame as a sneeze
To act his universe, and soon are gone.

Milton.
We read in Godenius, that upon a sneeze of the emperor of Monomotapa, there passed acclama-tions successively through the city. Brown.

SNIZZWORT. n. f. [ptarmica, Latin.] A plant.

SNIFF. n. f. [among hunters.] The fat of a deer. Dict.

SNOW. The old preterit of To show. Dict.
To SNIB. v. a. [snibbe, Danish. See SNAPP.] To check; to nip; to reprimand.

Asked for their pay by every snib,
That hit at will them to revile or snib. Hub. Tale.
SNIP and SNICE. n. f. A combat with knives.

Among the Dunkirkers, where snick and snice was fashion, a boatswain, with some of our men drinking together, became quarrelsome: one of our men hit him down; then kneeling upon his breast, he drew out a knife, sucking in his snib, and cut him from the ear towards the mouth. Wifeman.

To SNIGGER or SNIGGER. v. n. To laugh silly, wantonly, or contemptuously; to laugh in one's sleeve. Dict.

To SNIFE. v. n. [sniffa, Swedish.] To draw breath audibly by the nose.

So then you look'd fearful, and snift at the dean,
As who should say, Now am I knny and lean?

Swift.

To SNIGGER. v. n.
Sniggering is thus performed: in a warm day,
when the water is lowest, take a strong small hook, and to a string about a yard long; and then into one of the holes, where an eel may hide herself, with the help of a short stick put in your bait leisurely, and as far as you may conveniently: if within the sight of it, the eel will bite instantly, and as certainly gorge it: pull him out by degrees. Walton.

To SNIP. v. a. [snippen, Dutch.] To cut at once with scissors.

The snus should be laid open, which was snips up about two inches with a pair of probe-scissors, and the incised flaps dressed. Wifeman.

When tradesmen brought extravagant bills, Sir Roger used to bargain to cut off a quarter of a yard: he wore a pair of scissors for this purpose, and would snip it off nicely. Arbuthnot.

Putting one blade of the scissors up the gut, and the other up the wound, snip the whole length of the fistula. Sharp.

SNIP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A single cut with scissors.

What! thus a sleeve?
Here's snip and nip, and cut, and flish and flash,
Like to a censor in a barber's shop. Shakespeare.

The ulcer would not cure farther than it was laid open; therefore with one snip more I laid it open to the very end. Wifeman.

2. A small shred.

Those we keep within compass by small snips of emphatic, hoping to defend the parts about; but, in spite of all, they will spread farther. Wifeman.

3. A share; a snack. A low word.

He found his friend upon the mending hand, which he was glad to hear, because of the snip that he himself expected upon the dividend. L'Estrange.

SNIP. n. f. [sneppe, German; snitte,
Sax. ysnit, Welsh.]

1. A small fen fowl with a long bill.

The external evident causes of the atra bilis are a high fermenting diet; as old cheese, birds feeding in fens, as geese, ducks, woodcocks, snips, and tweans. Flayer.

2. A fool; a blockhead.

Thus do I ever make my fool my purse;
For I mine own gain'd knowledge should profane,
If I should time expend with such a snip.
But for my part and profit. Shakespeare.

SNIPPER. n. f. [from snip.] One that snips.

SNIPPER. n. f. [from snip.] A small part;
a share.

Witches simpling, and on gibbets
Cutting from malefactors snippets,
Or from the pillow tips of curs. Hudibras

SNIPSNAP. n. f. [a cant word formed by reduplication of snip.] Tart dialogue, with quick replies.

Denims and dissonance, and captions art,
And snipsnap short, and interruption heart. Pope

SNITE. n. f. [snite, Saxon.] A snipe.
This is perhaps the true name; but snipe prevails.

Of tame birds Cornwall hath doves, geese, and ducks: of wild, quail, rail, snite, and wood dove.

To SNITE. v. a. [snýtan, Saxon.] To blow the nose.

Nor would any one be able to snite his nose, or to sneeze; in both which the passage of the breath through the mouth, being intercepted by the tongue, is forced to go through the nose. Gra.

SNIVEL. n. f. [snivel, snivel, Germ.]

Snout; the running of the nose.

To SNIVEL. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To run at the nose.

2. To cry as children.

Funeral tears are lured out as mourning clonks, and whether we go to our graves snivelling or snugging, 'tis all mere form. L'Estrange

Away goes he snivelling and yelping, that he had dropt his axe into the water. L'Estrange.

SNIVELLER. n. f. [from snivel.] A weeper; a weak lamerter.

He'd more lament when I was dead,
Than all the snivellers round my bed. Swift.

To SNORE. v. n. [snorchen, Dutch.] To breathe hard through the nose, as men in sleep.

I did unreverently blame the gods,
Who wake for thee, though thou snore for thyself.
Ben Jonson.

What railing heroes, and what wounded gods,
Make some suspect he snore as well as nods.

He may lie in his shades, and snore on to dawn-day for me; unless I see further reason of disturbing his repose. Stillingfleet.

Is not yonder Proteus' cave?
It is; and in it lies the god asleep;
And snoring by
We may detect

The monsters of the deep. Dryden.
The giant, gurg'd with flesh, and wine, and
blood,

Lay stretch'd at length, and snoring in his den,
Belching raw goblets from his maw, o'ercharg'd
With purple wine and croddled gore confus'd.

Addison.
SNORE. n. f. [snopna, Saxon, from the verb.] Audible respiration of sleepers through the nose.

The rusted groons
Do mock their charge with snore: I've drugg'd their pollers. Shakespeare.

SNORER. n. f. [from snore.] He that *snore*s.

To SNORR. v. n. [snorchen, Dutch.] To blow through the nose as a high-mettled horse.

The snorting of his horses was heard.

The fiery war-horse paws the ground,
And snorts and trembles at the trumpet's sound.

From their full racks the generous steeds retire,
Dropping ambrosial toms, and snorting fire.

He with wide nostrils, snorting, skims the wave.

SNOT. n. f. [snote, Sax. snot, Dutch.]
The mucus of the nose.

Thus, when a greedy flover once has thrown
His snout into the net, 'tis all his own. Swift.

SNOUTY. adj. [from snout.] Full of snout.
This figure South my husband took in a thirty snout-note boy.

SNOUT. n. f. [snuyt, Dutch.]
1. The nose of a beast.

His nose in the an, his snout in the skins.

In shape a beagle's whelp throughout,
With broader forehead, and a sharper snout.

2. The nose of a man, in contempt.

Her noble snout
Did quickly wind her meaning out. Hudibras.

But when the date of Nock was out,
Off dropt the sympathetic snout. Hudibras.

What snout lips he has,
How foul a snout, and what a hanging face!

Charm'd with his eyes, and chin, and snout,
Her pocket glass drew thily out;
And grew enamour'd with her pluz.

As just the counterpart of his.

3. The nose or end of any hollow pipe.

SNOUTED. adj. [from snout.] Having a snout.

Their dogs snouted like foxes, but deprived of that property which the logicians call proprium quarta modo, for they could not back. Heylin.

Snouted and tailed like a por, and footed like a goat.

SNOW. n. f. [snap, Sax. snee, Dutch.]
The small particles of water frozen before they unite into drops.

Drought and heat co-tune snow waters.

He gives the winter's snow her airy birth,
And bids her virgin fleeces clothe the earth.

Soft as the fleeces of descending snows.

To SNOW. v. n. [snapan, Sax. sneuwen,
Dutch.] To fall in snow.

The hills being high about them, it snows at the tops of them oftener than it rains.

TO SNOW, v. a. To scatter like snow.
If thou be't born to be strange fight,
Ride ten thousand days and nights,
Till age show white hairs on thee. Donne.

SNOWBALL, n. f. [snow and ball.] A round lump of congelated snow.

They passed to the east-riding of Yorkshire, their company daily increasing, like a snowball in rolling. Hayward.

His bulky folly gathers as it goes,
And, rolling o'er you, like a snowball grows. Dryden.

A snowball having the power to produce in us the ideas of white, cold, and round, the powers, as they are in the snowball, I call qualities; and, as they are sensations in our understandings, ideas. Locke.

SNOWBROTH, n. f. [snow and broth.] Very cold liquor.

Angelo, a man whose blood
Is very snowbroth, one who never feels
The wanton stings and motions of the sense. Shakespeare.

SNOWDEEP, n. f. [viola bulbosa, Latin.] An herb.

SNOWDROP, n. f. [narcissuleucoium, Lat.] An early flower.

When we tried the experiment with the leaves of those purely white flowers that appear about the end of winter, called snowdrops, the event was not much unlike that newly mentioned. Boyle.

The little shape, by misgick power,
Grew less and less, contracted to a flower;
A flower that first in this sweet garden smil'd,
To virgin Idred, and the snowdrop styl'd. Tickel.

SNOW-WHITE, adj. [snow and white.] White as snow.

A snow-white bull shall on your shore be slain;
His offer'd entrails cast into the main. Dryden.

SNO'WY, adj. [from snow.] 1. White like snow.

So snews a snowy dove trooping with crows,
As yonder lady o'er her fellows shews. Shakespeare.

Now I see thy jolly train:
Snowy headed winter leads,
Spring and summer next succeeds;
Yellow autumn brings the rear;
Thou art father of the year. Rowe.

The blushing ruby on her snowy breast
Render'd its panting whiteness more confess. Prior.

2. Abounding with snow.

Thrice first in Crete
And Ida known; thence on the snowy top
Of cold Olympus rais'd the middle air. Milton.

As when the Tartar from his Russian foe,
By Astracan, over the snowy plains, Retires. Milton.

SNUR, n. f. [from snubbe, Dutch, a nose; or knubel, a joint of the finger.] A jag; a snag; a knot in wood.

Lifting up his dreadful club on high,
All arm'd with ragged snubs, and knotty grain,
Him thought at first encounter to have slain. Fairy Queen.

TO SNUB, v. a. [rather To snib: See SNAR, SNEB, SNIB.]

1. To check; to reprimand.

2. To nip.

Near the sea-shores, the heads and boughs of trees run out far to landward; but toward the sea are snubbed by the winds, as if their boughs had been pared or shaven off. Ray.

TO SNUB, v. n. [snuffen, Dutch.] To sob with convulsion.

TO SNUDGE, v. n. [sniger, Danish.] To lie idle, close, or snug.

Now he will fight it out, and to the wart;
Now eat his bread in peace,
And snudge in quiet, now he scorns increase;
Now all day spares. Herbert.

SNUFF, n. f. [snuff, Dutch, snoot.]

1. Snoot. In this sense it is not used.

3. The useless excrecence of a candle; whence moucher la chandelle.

My snuff and loathed part of nature should Burn itself out. Shakespeare.

But dearest heart, and dearer image, stay!
Alas! true joys at best are dreams enough:
Though you stay here, you pass too fast away;
For even at first life's taper is a snuff. Donne.

If the snuff be of a clove and glutinous consistency, it may burn without any snuff, as we see in camphire, and some other bituminous substances; and most of the ancient lamps were of this kind, because none have been found with such wicks. Wilkins.

3. A candle almost burnt out.

Lamentable!
To hide me from the radiant sun, and solace
I' th' dungeon by a snuff. Shakespeare.

4. The fired wick of a candle remaining after the flame.

A torch, snuff, and all, goes out in a moment, when dipped in the vapour. Addison.

5. Relentment expressed by sniffling; perverse relentment. Not used unless in low language.

What hath been seen
Either in snuffs or packings of the duke's,
Or the hard rain which both of them have borne Against the old kind king. Shakespeare.

6. Powdered tobacco taken by the nose.

Just where the breath of life his nostrils drew,
A charge of snuff the wily virgin threw;
The gnomes direct, to every atom just,
The pungent grains of utulating dust. Pope.

TO SNUFF, v. a. [snuffen, Dutch.]

1. To draw in with the breath.

A heifer will put up her nose, and snuff in the air, against rain. Bacon.

With delight he snuff'd the smell
Of mortal change on earth. Milton.

He snuffs the wind, his heels the sand exerts;
But when he stands collected in his might,
He roars, and promises a more successful fight. Dryden.

The youth,

Who holds the nearest station to the light,
Already seems to snuff the vital air,
And leans just forward on a shining spear. Dryden.

My troops are mounted; their Numidian steeds
Snuff up the wind, and long to scour the desert. Addison.

2. To scent.

The cow looks up, and from afar can find
The change of heav'n, and snuffs it in the wind. Dryden.

For thee the bulls rebel through the groves,
And tempt the Itrean, and snuff their absent loves. Dryden.

O'er all the blood-hound boasts superior skill,
To scent, to view, to turn, and boldly kill!
His fellows vain alarms rejects with scorn,
True to the master's voice, and learned horn:
His nostrils oft, if ancient fame sing true,
Trace the fly felon through the tainted dew:
Once snuff'd, he follows with unalter'd aim,
Nor odours lure him from the chosen game;
Deep-mouth'd he thunders, and millam'd he views,
Springs up relentless, and to death pursues. Tickel.

3. To crop the candle.

The late queen's gentlewoman
To be her mistress' mistress!
This candle burns not clear: 'tis I must snuff it,
And out it goes. Shakespeare.

Against a communion-day our lamps should be dressed, our lights snuffed, and our religion more active. Taylor.

You have got
An office for your talents fit,
To snuff the lights, and stir the fire,
And get a dinner for your hire. Swift.

TO SNUFF, v. a.

1. To snort; to draw breath by the nose.
The fury fires the pack; they snuff, they vent,
And feed their hungry nostrils with the scent. Dryden.

Says Hamper, sir, my master had me pray
Your company to dine with him to-day.
He snuffs, then follows, up the stairs he goes;
Never pulls off his hat, nor cleans his shoes. Kerr.

2. To sniff in contempt.

Ye sniff, what a weariness it is, and ye snuffed at it. M.

SNUFFBOX, n. f. [snuff and box.] The box in which snuff is carried.

If a gentleman leaves a snuff box on the table and goes away, lock it up as part of your van.
Sir Plume, of amber snuff box justly vain,
And the nice conduct of a clouded cane. Pope.

SNUFFER, n. f. [from snuff.] He that snuffs.

SNUFFERS, n. f. [from snuff.] The instrument with which the candle clipped.

When you have snuffed the candle, leave it snuffers open. Sn.

TO SNUFFLE, v. n. [snuffelen, Dutch.] To speak through the nose; to breathe hard through the nose.

A water-spaniel came down the river, then;
that he hunted for a duck; and with a snuff, grace, disdaining that his smelling force could as well prevail through the water as through air, waited with his eye to see whether he could catch the duck's getting up again. Sidney.

Bagpipes of the loudest drones,
With snuffling broken-winded tones,
Whose blasts of air, in pockets shut,
Sound siltier than from the gut. Hudibras.

It came to the ape to deliver his opinion, in finely and snuffed, and considered on't. L'Estrange.

One clad in purple,
Eats and recites some lamentable rhyme,
Some senseless Phillis in a broken note,
Snuffling at nose, and croaking in his throat. Dryden.

SNUFFLER, n. f. [from snuffle.] He that speaks through the nose.

TO SNUG, v. n. [sniger, Dutch.] To lie close; to snudge.

There, snugging well, he well appear'd content
So to have done amis, so to be silent. Shakespeare.

As the loving couple lay snugging together,
hus, to try if the cat had changed her manners,
her shape, turned a moule loose into the clamb.
L'Estrange.

SNUG, adj. [from the verb.]

1. Close; free from any inconvenience yet not splendid.

They spied a country farm,
Where all was snug, and clean, and warm,
For woods before, and hills behind,
Secur'd it both from rain and wind. Prior.

2. Close; out of notice.

Lie snug, and bear what critics say. St. J.

3. Slyly or insidiously close.

But I not see you, rascal! did I not,
When you lay snug, to snap young Damon's goat. Dryden.

TO SNUGGLE, v. n. [from snug.] To lie close; to lie warm.

So, adv. [jsa, Saxon; soo, Dutch; jo German.]

1. In like manner. It answers to as either preceding or following. Nothing comparison.

As whom the fables feign of monstrous form
Titanian or earthborn, that war'd on Jove,
So stretch'd out huge in length the archer bed by. Milton.

Thick as autumnal leaves that strew the brooks
In Valumbrosa, where the Etrurian shades
High over-arch'd embow'r'd so thick bestrew'd Abett and loft lay these. Milton.
He'd at first fight with what the muse imparts,
In fearless youth we tempt the heights of arts;
So pleas'd at first the tow'ring Alps we try,
Mount o'er the vales, and seem to tread the sky. Pope.

Acute air the purer spirits flow,
And separate from them kindred dregs below,
So let her soul to its congenial place. Pope.

2. To such a degree.
Why is his chariot so long in coming?
Can nothing great, and at the height,
Retard so long, but its own weight
Will mount it? Or is't blind chance
That will delay new states its advance? Ben Jonson.

Annet, my lovely foe,
Tell me where thy strength does lie,
Who is the pow'r that charms us so,
In thy soul, or in thy eye? Waller.
I lov'd in my mind, so far as I was able, the beginning, and prospects of a rising world. Burnet.
Since then our Arcate is with honour dead,
Why should we mourn that he so soon is need. Dryden.

Upon our first going into a company of strangers, our benevolence or aversion rises towards several particular persons; therefore we have heard them speak of as much as know who they are. Spectator.
We think our fathers' tools, so wife we're grown
On wiser souls, no doubt, will think us so. Pope.

3. In such a manner.
There's no such thing as that we beauty call,
It never colonage all;
For though some long ago
Held certain colours mingled so and so,
That doth not tie me now from chasing new. Shakspere.

We may be certain that man is not a creature that hath wings; because this only concerns the manner of his existence; and we, seeing what he is, may certainly know that he is not so or so. Locke.

I shall minutely tell him the steps by which I was brought into this way, that he may judge whether I proceeded rationally, if so be any thing in my example is worth his notice. Locke.
This gentleman is a person of good sense, and knows that he is very much in Sir Roger's esteem, so that he lives in the family rather as a relation than as a dependent. Addison.

4. It is regularly answered by as or that,
but they are sometimes omitted.
So fawn'd the mighty combatants, that hell
Giv'd yker at their frown. Milton.
There is something equivalent in France and Spain; and so as it is a very hard calumny upon our religion to affirm that so excellent a fruit will not grow here. Temple.

5. In the same manner.
Of such examples add me to the roll;
We rarely indeed in me may neglect,
But God's purpos'd deliverance not so. Milton.
To keep up the tutor's authority, use him with great respect yourself, and cause all your family to do so too. Locke.

According to the multifariousness of this unnu-merable, so are the possibilities of being. Norris.

6. Thus; in this manner.
Not far from thence the mountain fields appear Sever'd from lovers that inhabit there. Dryden.
Does this deserve to be rewarded so?
Is there some here a stranger or a foe? Dryden.
It concerns every man, with the greatest serenity, to enquire into those matters, whether they be or not. Tillotson.

No nation ever complain'd they had too broad,
Too deep, or too many rivers; they understand better than so how to value those inestimable gifts of nature. Bentley.

So when the first bold vessel dar'd the seas,
High on the stern the Phœcean rais'd his strain. Pope.

Whether this be from an habitual motion of the animal spirits, or from the alteration of the constituent.

tution by some more unaccountable way, this is certain, that so it is. Locke.

7. Therefore; for this reason; in consequence of this.

The god, though loth, yet was constrain'd to obey
For longer time than that no living wight
Below the earth might suffer'd he to stay;
So back again him brought to living light. Shakspere.
Trafficke, or love ye, and like theeves oppresse
Poor strange adventurers, expoling so
Your souls to danger, and your lives to woe? Chapman.

If he set industriously and sincerely to perform the commands of Christ, he can have no ground of doubting but it shall prove successful to him; and so all that he hath to do is, to endeavour by prayer, and one of the means, to qualify himself for this blessed condition. Hammond.
It is very satisfaction, and so instructive, to the fidelity of the fabled articles and rule of the church. Hobbes.

Some are fall'n, to disobedience fall'n;
And so from heav'n to it repeat hell. Milton.
God makes him in his own image an intellectual creature, and so capable of dominion. Locke.

8. On these terms; noting a conditional petition; answered by as.

O goddess! tell what I would try,
Then know't it, and I'll do too much to pray;
So grant my suit, ere I exhaust my might,
In love to thy discomport. Dryden.

Here then exchange we mutually forgiveness
So may the guilt of all my broken vows,
My promises to thee be all forgotten;
As here I part without an angry thought. Rome.
So may kind rains their vital moisture yield,
And swell the future harvest of thy field. Pope.

9. Provided that; on condition that; modo, Be not that:

Evil into the mind of God or man
May come and go, so unprovok'd, and leave
No spot or blame behind. Milton.

So the doctrine but whole some and edifying, though there should be a want of exactness in the manner of speaking or reasoning, it may be overlooked. Athen.

Too much of love thy hapless friend has prov'd,
Too many giddy foolish hours are gone;
May the remaining few know only friendship:
So thou, my dearest, trust, befit Maria,
Vouchsafe to lodge me in thy gentle heart,
A partner there, I will give up mankind. Rome.

10. In like manner; noting concession of one proposition and assumption of another; answering to as.

As a war should be undertaken upon a just motive, so a prince ought to consider the condition he is in when he enters on it. Scott.

11. So sometimes retains the sense of a word or sentence going before; and is used to avoid repetition; as, the two brothers were valiant, but the eldest was more so; that is, more valiant. The French article le is often used in the same manner. This mode of expression is not to be used but in familiar language, nor even in that to be commended.

The fat with plenty lads my heart,
The lean with love makes me too so. Conley.
Who thinks his wife is virtuous, though not so,
Is pleas'd and patient till the truth be known. Dunham.

Not to admire is all the art I know
To make me a happy, and to keep him so. Creech.
One may as well say, that the centurion should be only national, as to say that the deluge was so. Burnet.

However full within it emblyes they are,
To you they will be void by despoil;
For having once been given, will they know,
To a revengeful prince they fall are so. Dryden.
He was great ere fortune made him so. Dryden.
I laugh at every one, said an old cynic, who laughs at me. Do you so? replied the philosopher;
then you live the fiercest life of any man in Athens. Addison.

They are beautiful in themselves, and much more so in the noble language peculiar to that great poet. Addison.

Common-place books have been long used by indolent young divines, and still continue so. Sayl.

As to his using ludicrous expressions, my opinion is, that they are not so. Pope.

The blit to day is as complete so,
As who began a thousand years ago. Pope.

12. Thus it is; this is the state.
How narrow shakes land!
So, now the tempest tears him up by the roots,
And on the ocean extends its no less arm. Dryden.

13. At this point; at this time.
When
With wild wood-leaves and weeds I have strew'd his grave,
And on it laid a century of prayers,
Such as I can, twice o'er, I'll weep and sigh;
And, leaving so his service, follow you, Shakspere.

14. It notes a kind of abrupt beginning;
well.

O, so, and had you a council
Of ladies too? Who was your speaker, Madam? Ben Jonson.

15. It sometimes is little more than an ex-pletive, though it implies some latent or faint comparison. In French, si.

An adverb is not quite so proper, where relaxing the amny pulchritude is necessary. Arbutnot.

16. A word of assumption; thus he it.
There is Henry, if your father will do me any honour, to; it not, let him kill the next Prince himself. Shakspere.

I will never bear a false mind; it it be my duty, so, if it be not, so. No man is too good to serve his prince. Shakspere.

17. A form of petition.
Ready are thy lips to plant and defend him,
The monarch and his man, to enter the lists,
So please your highness to behold the fight. Shakspere.

18. So much as. However much. This is, I think, an irregular expression.

So much as you admire the beauty of his verse,
his prose is full as good. Pope.

19. So so. An exclamation after some thing done or known. Corrupted, I think, from cesset.

I would not have thee hunger in thy pain;
So so; it works; now, unduly, fit you fast. Dryden.

20. So so. [essi, coss, Italian.] Indifferently; not much either nor well.

He's not very tall; yet for his years he's tall;
His leg is not so, and yet 'tis well. Shakspere.

Deliver us from the most odious repetition of As
and so, which in so waters, I may call them beetles, continually mounting at our ears. Pettam.

21. So that. Thus then it is that; therefore.

So that the Volscians stand but as at first Ready, when time shall prompt them to make good Upon Senarius. Shakspere.

To a war are required a just quarrel, sufficient forces, and a ready choice of the dearest so then,
I will judiciously weigh, balance the forces,
and propound debates. Bacon.

22. To soak. v. n. [proem, Saxon.]

1. To be steeped in medicine.
For the cure of an aching will draw in More than the common flocks. Shakspere.

2. To enter by degrees into power.
Lay a heap of earth upon it, to discompose it follow with, putting in a little more, and pour water upon it, to so it, to so it, it will make a kind of so in the soil, and let it up to itself by the ordinary. Bacon.

3. To drink gluttonously and intemperately.
This is a low term.

Let a drunkard see that his health decays, his estate wastes, yet the habitual thirst after his cups drives him to the tavern, though he has to his view the loss of health and plenty; the least of which he considers is far greater than the tugging of his palate with a glass of wine, or the idle chat of a smoking club. Locke.

To Soak. v. a.

1. To macerate in any moisture; to steep; to keep wet till moisture is imbibed; to drench.

Many of our princes
Lie drench'd and wash'd in necessary blood:
So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs
In blood of princes. Shakspeare.
Their head shall be soak'd with blood. Lyndah.
These deep Cuckles soak the yellow sands. Dryden.

Womankind, put into the brine you soak your corn in, prevents the birds eating it. Mortimer.

2. To draw in through the pores.

Thou, whose life's a dream of lazy pleasure:
'Tis all thy bus'ness, bus'ness how to shun,
To bask thy naked body in the sun,
Supplying thy fill'd joints with fragrant oil;
Then in thy spacious garden walk a while,
To tick the moisture up and soak it in. Dryden.

3. To drain; to exhaust. This seems to be a cant term, perhaps used erroneously for soak.

Plants that draw much nourishment from the earth, and soak, and exhaust it, hurt all things that grow by them. Bacon.

A greater sinner than a faver; for though he had such means to accumulate, yet his forts, and his garisons, and his tentings, which he was only sumptuous, could not but soak his exchequer. Wotton.

SOAKER. n. f. [from soak.]

1. He that macerates in any moisture.
2. A great drinker. In low language.

SOAP. n. f. [sape, Saxon; sapo, Lat.] A substance used in washing, made of a lixivium of vegetable alkaline ashes and any unctuous substance.

Soap is a mixture of a fixed alkaline salt and oil, its virtues are cleansing, penetrating, attenuating, and resolving, and any mixture of any oily substance with salt may be called a soap. Booth.

He is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers soap. Plautus.

A bubble blown with water, first made tenacious by dissolving a little soap in it, after a while will appear tinged with a great variety of colours. Newton.

Soap-earth is found in great quantity on the land near the banks of the river Hermus, seven miles from Smyrna. Woodward.

Soap-ashes are much commended, after the soap-boilers have done with them, for cold or four lands. Mortimer.

As rain water diminishes their salt, so the mottening of them with chamber-lee or soap-finds adds thereto. Mortimer.

SOAPBOILER. n. f. [soap and boil.] One whose trade is to make soap.

A soapboiler consoles with me on the duties on cattle soap. Addison.

To Soar. v. n. [forare, Italian.]

1. To fly aloft; to tower; to mount; properly to fly without any visible action of the wings. Milton uses it actively.

'Tis but a late ignoble mind
That mounts no higher than a bird can soar. Shakspeare.

Feather'd fowl and fleg'd,
They fann'd their pens, and soaring th' air sublimed,
With clang despoil'd the ground. Milton.

2. To mount intellectually; to tower with the mind.

How high a pitch his resolution soars. Shakspeare.

Valour soars above

What the world calls misfortune and afflictions.

Addison.

3. To rise high.

Who aspires mast down as low
As high he soar'd. Milton.
Flames rise and sink by fits, at last they soar
In one bright blaze, and then descend no more. Dryden.

When swallows fleet soar high, and sport in air,
He told us that the welkin would be clear. Gay.

SOAR. n. f. [from the verb.] Towering flight.

With a soar
Outwining eagles, to all the fowls he seems A phoenix. Milton.

To SOB. v. n. [reob, complaining, Saxon.]

Perhaps it is a mere onomatopoeia copied from the found. To heave audibly with convulsive sorrow; to sigh with convulsion.

When thy wail like father, like a child,
Told the sad story of my father's death,
He twenty times made pause to sob and weep. Shakspeare.

As if her life and death lay on his faving,
Some tears the flood, with sighs and sobbing mixt,
As if her hopes were dead through his delaying. Farfio.

She sigh'd, she sob'd, and furious with despair,
She rent her garments, and she tore her hair. Dryden.

When children have not the power to obtain their desire, they will, by their clamour and sobbing, maintain their title to it. Locke.

I sob'd; and with faint eyes
Look'd upwards to the Ruler of the skies. Harte.

SOB. n. f. [from the verb.] A convulsive sigh; a convulsive act of respiration obstructed by sorrow.

Break, heart, or choke with sobs my hated breath;
Do thy own work, admit no foreign death. Dryden.

There oft are heard the notes of infant woe,
The float thick sob, loud scream, and shriller squall. Pope.

A wondrous bag with both her hands she binds:
There she collects the force of female lungs,
Sighs, sobs, and passions, and the war of tongues. Pope.

To SON. v. a. To soak. A cant word.

The tree being sobbed and wet, swells. Mortimer.

SOBER. adj. [sobrius, Lat. sober, Fr.]

1. Temperate, particularly in liquors; not drunken.

Live a sober, righteous, and godly life. Cam. Pr.
The vines give wine to the drunkard as well as to the sober man. Taylor.

No sober temperate person, whatsoever other sins he may be guilty of, can look with complacency upon the drunkenness and fortitudes of his neighbour. South.

2. Not overpowered by drink.

A law there is among the Grecians, whereof Pittacus is author; that he which being overcome with drink did then drink any man, should suffer punishment double as much as if he had done the same being sober. Hooker.

3. Not mad; right in the understanding.

Another, who had a great genius for tragedy, following the fury of his natural temper, made every man and woman in his plays stark raving mad: there was not a sober person to be had, all was tempestuous and blustering. Dryden.

No sober man would put himself into danger, for the applause of escaping without breaking his neck. Dryden.

4. Regular; calm; free from inordinate passion.

This tame young sober blooded boy a man cannot make him laugh. Shakspeare.

Cicero travelled all over Peru, and is a grave and sober writer. Abbot.

Young men likewise exhort to be sober minded. Titus.

The governor of Scotland being of great courage, and sober judgment, supply performed his duty both before the battle and in the field. Heyward.

These confusions disposed men of any sober understanding to wish for peace. Clarendon.

Among them some sober men confessed, that as his majesty's affairs then stood, he could not grant it. Clarendon.

To these that sober race of men, whose lives Religious titled them the sons of God,
Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame
Ignobly to the trans and to the tines
Of these fair wheels. Milton.

Be your designs ever so good, your actions ever to sober, and your searches directed to the fear of God. Hooker.

5. Serious; solemn; grave.

Shall offer me, disgird'd in sober robes,
To old Baptista as a foolmaster. Shakspeare.

Come, civil night,
Thou sober-suited matron, all in black. Shakspeare.

Had in her sober hy're all things clad. Milton.
What parts gay France from sober Spain?

A little rising rocky chain:
Of men born south or north o' th' hill,
These felds move, they ne'er stand still. Pope.

For Swift and him despoil'd the face of fate,
The sober follies of the wide and great See her sober over a lamplight, or gay over a candle luby. Pope.

To SOBER. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make sober; to cure of intoxication.

A little learning is a dangerous thing,
Drink deep, or taste not the Persian spring,
Then shallow draughts intoxicate the brain,
And drinking largely sober us again. Pope.

SOBERLY. adv. [from sober.]

1. Without intemperance.
2. Without madness.

3. Temperately; moderately.
Let any prince think soberly of his forces, except his militia of natives be valiant soldiers. Bacon.

4. Coolly; calmly.
Whenever children are chastised, let it be done without passion, and soberly, laying on the blow slowly. Locke.

SOBERNESS. n. f. [from sober.]

1. Temperance in drink.

Keep my body in temperance, soberness, and chastity. Cam. Pr.

2. Calmness; freedom from enthusiasm coolness.

surgical preparations, made Herod's experiment
inced very well. Locke.

The soberness of Yugal might have the same difference. Bacon.

SOBERETY. n. f. [from sobrietas, Fr. sober Latin.]

1. Temperance in drink; sobriety.

Drunkenness is more moderate to the
and in temperance more declared against gluttony, and soberety both obtained to be temperance in drinking. Locke.

2. Present freedom from the power of strong liquor.

3. General temperance.

In fixing down the form of common parlance there was no need that the book should mention either the learning of a fit, or the number of a ignorant, immiter, more than that he scibeth the manner how to pitch a field, and speak of moderation and soberety over. Locke.

4. Freedom from inordinate passion.

The libidine could not prevail on men of virtue and soberety to give up their religion. Locke.

5. Calmness; coolness.

Enquire, with all soberity and severity, what there be in the footsteps of nature any to be million of inordinate virtues, and what the of imagination is. Locke.

Soberity in our riper years is the effect of a concocted warmth; but where the principles only phlegm, what can be expected but an manhood, and old infancy. Locke.

Sometimes Ovid appears too gay, there is a secret gracefulness of youth which accompanies his writings, though the staydness and sobriety of age be wanting. Dryden.

6. Seriousness; gravity.

A report without truth; and, I had almost said, without any sobriety or modesty. Waterland. Mirth makes them not mad; Nor sobriety bad. Denham.

SOCAGE. n. f. [soc, Fr. a ploughshare; socagium, barbarous Latin.] A tenure of lands for certain inferior or husbandly services to be performed to the lord of the fee.

All services due for land being knight's service, socage, to that which is not knight's service, is socage. This socage is of three kinds, a socage of free tenure, where a man holdeth by free service of twelve pence a-year for all manner of services. Socage of ancient tenure is of land of ancient descent, where no writ original shall be laid, but the writ secundum consuetudinem manerii. Socage of base tenure is where those that hold it may have none other writ but the moovitarrant, and such socmen hold not by certain service. Cowell.

The lands are not holden at all of her majesty, or not holden in chief, but by a mean tenure in socage, or by knight's service. Bacon.

SOCAGER. n. f. [from socage.] A tenant by socage.

1. Fit to be conjoined.

Another law toucheth them, as they are sociable put united into one body; a law which bindeth them each to serve unto other's good, and all to prefer the good of the whole before whatsoever their own particular. Hooker.

2. Ready to unite in a general interest.

To make man mild and sociable to man; To cultivate the wild contentious savage With wisdom, discipline. Addison.

3. Friendly; familiar; conversible.

Then thus employ'd behold With pity heav'n's high King, and to him call'd Raphael, the sociable spirit that deign'd To travel with Tobias. Milton.

4. Inclined to company.

In children much solitude and silence I like not, nor any thing born before his time, as this must needs be in that sociable and exalted age. Hutton

SOCIABLENESS. n. f. [from sociable.]

1. Inclination to company and converse.

Such a word call her friendship love, and feign sociableness a name profane. Donne.

The two main properties of man are contemplation and sociableness, or love of converse. More.

2. Freedom of conversation; good fellowship.

He always meted courtesy and modesty, disliked sociableness, from thence sociableness and fellowship well set by many. Howland.

SOCIALLY. adv. [from sociable.] Conversationally, as a companion.

Yet not terrible, But I should fear; nor sociably mild, As Raphael, that I should much confide; But bold and sublime. Milton.

SOCIAL. adj. [socialis, Latin.]

1. Relating to general or publick interest; relating to society.

To love our neighbour as ourselves, is such a natural truth for regulating human society, that by that alone one might determine all the civil and moral laws. Locke.

The love of love and social are the same. Pope.

2. Confining in union or converse with another.

Thou in thy secrecy although alone, Best with thyself accompanied, seek'st not Social communication. Milton.

SOCIALNESS. n. f. [from social.] The quality of being social.

SOCIETY. n. f. [société, French; societas, Latin.]

1. Union of many in one general interest.

If the power of one society extend likewise to the making of laws for another society, as if the church could make laws for the state, or temporals, or the state make laws binding the church relating to spirituals, then is that society entirely subject to the other. Tylor.

2. Numbers united in one interest; community.

As the practice of piety and virtue is agreeable to our reason, so is it for the interest of private persons and publick societies. Tillotson.

3. Company; converse.

To make society The sweeter welcome, we will keep ourself Till it is past-time alone. Shallop.

Whilst I was big in clamour, came thence a man, Who having seen me in my wretched state, Shunn'd my abhor'd society. Shallop.

And short retirement in peace sweet return. Milton.

4. Partnership; union on equal terms.

Among unequals what society can fort? Milton. Heav'n's greatness no society can bear, Servants he made, and those thou want'st not here Dryden.

SOCK. n. f. [foccus, Latin; foce, Saxon; focke, Dutch.]

1. Something put between the foot and shoe.

Ere I lead this hie long, I'll tow neither socks, and mend them, and foot them too. Shallop.

A physician, that would be loyal, prescribeth for the rheum to walk continually upon a camomile alley; meaning he should put camomile within his socks. Bacon.

2. The shoe of the ancient comic actors, taken in poems for comedy, and opposed to bukkin or tragedy.

Then to the well-trad finger anon, If Jouton's learned sock be on, Or twelfth Shinkspare, fancy's child, Whistle his native wood-notes wild. Milton.

Great Fletcher never needs in buskins here, Nor greater Jouton dares in socks appear, But gentle Shinkspare just reception finds Amidst the monument of vanquish'd hands. Dryden.

On two figures of actors in the villa Madama at Rome, we see the fashion of the old sock and lappa. Addison.

SOCKET. n. f. [soquette, French.]

1. Any hollow pipe; generally the hollow of a candlestick.

Two goodly beacons, set in sockets of brass, Therein gave light, and flam'd continually, For they of living fire most subtilly Were made, and set in silver sockets bright. Fairfax.

She at your flames would soon take fire, And like a candle in the socket Dissolve. Hudibras.

The nightly virgins fire When sparkling lamps then spout ring bright advance, And in the sockets gaily bubbles dance. Dryden.

The flames amaz'd run backward from the light, And, drunk with them sockets, lost their light. Dryden.

Two dire comets In the crown plague and fire have breath'd their lab, Or dimly in their sinking sockets down. Dryden.

To nurse up the vital flame as long as the matter will last, is not always good business; it is much better to cover it with an extrinseous of honour, than let it consume till it turns blue, and lies agonizing within the socket, and at length gets out in no perfume. Collier.

2. The receptacle of the eye.

His eye-balls in their hollow sockets funk, Bereft of sleep, he loaths his meat and drink;

He withers at his heart, and looks as wan As the pale spectre of a moulder'd man. Dryden.

3. Any hollow that receives something inserted.

The sockets and supporters of flowers are figured, as in the five brethren of the rose, and sockets of gillyflowers. Bacon.

Compholis is the connection of a tooth to its socket. Ilgen.

As the weight leans wholly upon the axis, the grating and rubbing of the leaves against the sockets wherein they are placed, will cause some magnitude and resistance to that rotation of the cylinder which would otherwise ensue. Hutton.

On either side the head produce an ear, And look a socket for the shining thimble. Dryden.

SOCKLESTONE. n. f. A stronger sort of chisel.

Carpenters, for their rougher work, use a stronger sort of chisels, and distinguish them by the name of socket-stones, then a block made with a hollow socket at the top, to receive a strong wooden spring made to fit into the socket. Mason.

A splendid seat covered with carpets.

The king leaped off from the sofa on which he sat, and cried out, 'I say my Abdallah!' Guardian.

SOFT. adj. [softe, Saxon; soft, Dutch.]

1. Not hard.
Hard and soft are names we give things, only in relation to the constitution of our own bodies; that being called hard, which will put us to pain former than change figure, by the pressure of any part of our bodies; and that soft, which changes the situation of its parts upon a easy touch. Locke.

Some bodies are hard, and some soft: the hardness is caused by the compactness of the spirit, which, in a greater degree, make not only hard but fragil. Bacon

Hot and cold were in one body fixt, And soft with hard, and light with heavy mixt. Dryden.

2. Not rugged; not rough.
What went ye out for to see? a man clothed in soft raiment? behold, they that wear soft raiment are in kings houses. Matthew.

3. Ductile; not unchangeable of form.
Spirits can either lose softness, or soft And uncompounded is then essence pure. Milton.

4. Facile; flexible; not resolute; yielding.
A few divines of to soft and feeble temper, as disposed them to sudden acting and complacence. King Charles.

One king is too soft and easy; another too fiery. L'Alfange

5. Tender; timorous.
What he hath done faintly, he did it to that end; though soft confounded men can be content to fly, it was for his country. Shakespeare.

However soft within themselves they are, To you they will be valiant by despair. Dryden.
Curl be the verse, how well softer it flows, That tends to make one worthy man my foe;
Give virtue fraudulent, innocence a tear,
Or from the soft-eyed virgin steal a tear. Pope

6. Mild; gentle; kind; not severe.
Would my heart were flint, like Edward's,
Or Edward's soft and pitiful like mine. Shakespeare
Our torments may become as soft as now severe. Milton.

Yet soft his nature, though severe his lay;
His anger moral, and his wisdom gay. Pope.

7. Meek; civil; complaisant.
Thou art their soldier, and, being bred in bonds, Hast not the soft way, which the dot confers
Were fit for thee to use, as they to claim,
In asking thou good loves. Shakespeare.

8. Placid; full; easy.
On her soft axle while she passes even,
She bears the soft with the slow char along. Milton

There, soft extended to the murmuring hummel
Of the high porch, thy lips sleep profound. Pope.

9. Effeminate; vitiously nice.
This taste is also our religion at
Which to soft people sweet perfumes doth sell;
Though this dear art doth the good impart,
Since they fine'll belt, that do of nothing think. Dryden

An idle and soft course of life is the source of original pleasures. Proeme

10. Delicate; elegantly tender.
Her form more soft and more fine. Milton

Cenit'ric fit upon the ear. Pope.

14. Not forcible; not violent.

Sleep falls with soft; slumbrous wet, lit. Milton.

15. Mild; not glaring.

The sun shining upon the upper part of the clouds, made them appear like fine down or wool, and made the soft light less light, less visible. Bacon.

SOFT. interj. Hold; stop; not so fast.

But soft, I pray you; did king Richard then Proclaim my brother? Shakespeare.

Oh! come in, Emilia;
Soft, by and by, let me the curtains draw. Shakespeare.

But soft, my mule, the world is wide,
And all at once was not detected. Shakespeare.

TO SOFTEN. v. a. [from soft.]

1. To make soft; to make less hard.
Podies, into which the water will enter, long feeding with rather soften than moderate. Bacon.

Their arrow's point they soften in the flame,
And sounding hammers break its barbed frame. Gay.

2. To intenerate; to make less fierce or obstinate; to mollify.
I will soften stony hearts. Milton.

Our friends see not our faults, or conceal them, or soften them by their representation. Addison.

I would correct the harsh expressions of one party, by softening and reconciling methods. Watts.

3. To make easy; to compose; to make placid; to mitigate; to palliate; to alleviate.

Call round her touch each object of desire;
Bid her by all that chears or softens life,
The tender sister, daughter, friend, and wife. Pope.

Musick the fiercest griefs can charm;
Musick can soften pain to ease. Pope.

And make despond and mad as is pleads. Pope.

4. To make less harsh, less vehement, less violent.

He bore his great compassion in his look,
But sweetly temper'd awe, and soften'd all his frown. Dryden.

5. To make less glaring.

6. To make tender; to enervate.

TO SOFTEN. v. n.

1. To grow less hard.

Many bodies, that will hardly melt, will soften,
as soon as the heat. Bacon.

2. To grow less obdurate, cruel, or obstinate.

He may soften at the sight of the child;
The silence often of pure innocence
Persuades, when the long trials. Shakespeare.

SOFTLY. adv. [from soft.]

1. Without hardness.

2. Not violently; not forcibly.

Solid bodies, if very softly pressed, are not found, as when a man treadeth very softly upon boards. Bacon.

3. Not loudly.

Abraham's robes, and went softly. Shakespeare.

In this dark life of soft peace, let us be town,
And to the great I send direct your steps. Dryden.

4. Gently; placidly.
Death will soften me,
And lay me softly in a native dust.
To pay the latest of allowing of trust. Dryden
She with a wreath of white roses his eyes,
And softly lays him on a flow'ry bed. Dryden.

5. Mildly; tenderly.

The king must die;
Though pity softly plead within my soul,
Yet he must die, that I may make you great. Dryden.

SOFTNER. n. f. [from soft.]

1. That which makes soft.

2. One who palliates.

Those softners and expedient-mongers sale their heads so strongly, that we can hear the pockets jingle. Swift.

SOFTNESS. n. f. [from soft.]

1. The quality of being soft; quality contrary to hardness.

Softness cometh by the greater quantity of spirits, which ever induce yielding and cessaand by the more equal spreading of the tangible parts, which thereby are more sliding and softening; as in gold. Bacon.

2. Mildness; kindness.

A wife man, when there is a necessity of expressing any evil actions, should do it by a word that is a secondry idea of kindness or softness, or a word that carries in it rebuke and severity. Bacon.

3. Civility; gentleness.

They turn the softness of the tongue into the hardness of the teeth. Hobbes.

Improve these virtues, with a softness of manner,
and a sweetness of conversation. Dryden.

4. Effeminacy; vitious delicacy.

So long as idleness is quite shut out from our lives, all the sins of wantonness, softness, and ef-feminacy, are prevented; and there is but little room for temptation. Taylor.

He was not delighted with the softness of the court. Caroline.

5. Timorousness; pusillanimity.

This virtue could not proceed out of fear or softness; for he was valiant and active. Bacon.

Saving a man's self, or suffering, if with reason, is virtue; if without it, is softness or obliquity. Greene.

6. Quality contrary to hardness.

Softness of sounds is distinct from the softness of sounds. Bacon.

7. Facility; gentleness; candour; eagerness to be affected.

Such was the ancient simplicity and softness of spirit which sometimes prevailed in the world, that they, whole words were even as oracles, and men, learned everywhere both to give and receive any thing publicly received in the church of God. Pope.

8. Contrariety to energetick vehemence.

Who but thyself the mad and ear of the
With strength and softness, energy and ease. Shakespeare.

9. Mildness; meekness.

For contemplation he and valour form'd,
For softness the and sweet attractive grace. Shakespeare.

Her habit was a look
This softness from thy finger took. Shakespeare.

SOUL. interj. A form of calling from a distant place.

TO SOUL. v. a. [soilum, Saxon; soelen, old German; soullen, French.]

1. To soul; to dirt; to pollute; to stain; to sully.

A silly man in simple weeds forlorn,
And souled with dirt on the long dined way. Shakespeare.

Although some heretics have alledg'd that yet the sun is not souled in passage. Bacon.

Myself with sin, I then but vainly toil
I would not soul these pure ambrosiall words
With the rank vapours of this tin-worn world. Shakespeare.

Bed trait of knowledge, if this be to know,
Which leaves us naked thus of honest words
Of conscience, of both of purity,
Our sacred ornaments now souled and soiled. Shakespeare.

One, who could not for a taste of the flesh, could taste the souled earth,
While reflecting on a mangled Ombat's blood. Shakespeare.

If the eye-glass be tinted faintly with the smoke of a lamp or torch, to obscure the light of the star, the fainter light in the circumference of the star ceases to be visible, and the star, if the glass be sufficiently foiled with smoke, appears something more like a mathematical point. Newton.

An absent hero's bell they fought to foil.
An absent hero's wealth they made their spoil. Pope.

To dung; to manure.
Men now present, just as they foil their ground, not that they love the dirt, but that they expect a crop. South.

To foil a horse; to purge him by giving him grafs in the spring. It is in Shakespeare to glut. [saouler, French.]
The foiled horse. Shakespeare

foil, n. f. [from the verb.]
Dirt; spot; pollution; foulness.

By indirect ways
I met this crown; and I myself know well
How troublefome it sat upon my head;
To this I shall descend with better quiet;
For all the foil of the achievement goes
With me into the earth. Shakespeare.
That would he a great foil in the new glories of your marriage. Shakespeare.

Vex'd I am with passions,
Which give some foil perhaps to my behaviour. Shakespeare.

A lady's honour must be touch'd,
When, once as crumms, will not lie on a foil. Dryden.
[fol, French; folium, Latin.] Ground; earth, considered with relation to its vegetative qualities.

Judgment may be made of waters by the foil whereupon they run. Bacon.

Her spots thou see'st
As clouds, and clouds may rain, and rain produce Fruit in her fallu'd foil. Milton.

The last cause of a kingdom's thriving is the fruitfulness of the foil, to produce the necessities and conveniences of life; not only for the inhabitants, but for exportation. Suff.

Land; country.

Doth, that with fearful foil
Is discontented steps in foreign foil,
This or alliance shall call home
To high promotions. Shakespeare.

On a expected stroke, worse than of death!
Maid thus leave thee, I am told; thus leave Thee, native foil! these happy walks and shades, Fountains of joys. Milton.

Dung; compost.

The haven's been stopp'd up by the great heaps of dirt that the sea has thrown into it, for all the reason that the Ravenna has been left there standing by the sea. Addison.

Improvement by dung, and other sort of foils.
Motley.

SO'LINESS, n. f. [from foil.] Stain; foul-ness.

tion.

He merits well to have her,
Not making any temple of her foil. Shakespeare.

SO'JOURN, v. n. [sojourn, French;
sojournare, Italian.] To dwell anywhere for a time; to live as not at home, to inhabit as not in a settled habitation. Almost out of use.

It is the expression of your month,
You are to be at, and sojourn with my sister,
I am to be at your train, come then to me. Shakespeare.

The advantage of his absence took the king,
And he the mean time sojourn'd at my father's. Shakespeare.

How comes it he is to sojourn with you? how does he come to France? Shakespeare.

He is sojourn, though he sojourn every where
In prayer, yet his minding house is here. Donne.

The sojourn of Israel, who dwell in Egypt,
was four hundred and thirty years. Ezodus.

The soldiers first assembled at Newcastle, and there sojourn'd three days. Hayward.

To sojourn in that land
He comes invited. Milton.

He who sojourns in a foreign country, refers what he sees abroad to the state of things at home. Attelbury.

SO'JOURN, n. f. [sojour, French; from the verb.] A temporary residence; a casual and no settled habitation. This word was anciently accented on the last syllable: Milton accents it indifferently.

The princes, France and Burgundy,
Long in our court have made their am'rous sojourn. Shakespeare.

There I revisit now,
Ere I'd the Stygian pool, though long detain'd
In that obscure sojourn. Milton.

Scarce view'd the Galilean towns,
And once a-year Jerusalem, few days
Short sojourn. Milton.

SO'JOURNER, n. f. [from sojourn.] A temporary dweller.

We are Romans and sojourners, as were all our fathers: our days on earth are as a shadow. 1 Chronicles.

Waves o'erthrew
Bosnia, and his Memphis chivvry,
While with perfidious hatred they pursued
The sojourners of Goshen. Milton.

Not for a night, or quick revolving year,
Welcome an owner, not a sojourn. Devin.

To SO'LAKE, v. a. [solacere, old French;
solazzare, Italian; solatium, Latin.] To comfort; to cheer; to amuse.

We will with some strange pastime solace them. Shakespeare.

The birds with song
Solac'd the woods. Milton.

To SO'LAKE, v. n. To take comfort; to be recreated. Obsolete.

One poor and loving child,
But one thing to my peace and solace in,
And cruel death hath catch'd it from my sight. Shakespeare.

Were they to be sol'd, and not to rule,
This sickly land might solace as before. Shakespeare.

SO'LAKE, n. f. [solatium, Latin.] Comfort; pleasure; alleviation; that which gives comfort or pleasure; recreation; amusement.

Therena sat a lady fresh and fair,
Making facet solace to herself alone,
Sometimes the lute as loud as lark in air,
Sometimes the lute as loud as lark in air.

Sometimes the lute as loud as lark in air,
Sometimes the lute as loud as lark in air.

It we have that which is meet and right, although they be glad, we do not think it a duty of ours to be in every such thing their timentous. Hooker.

Give me leave to go,
For now would solace, not my age would lead. Shakespeare.

Great joy he perceiv'd in his thoughts, and how Solace in his return. Milton.

It I would I might my private hours
With music or with poem, where to loon
As in our native language I find That solace. Milton.

A rough fight he lost,
Life yet he thence my life's day's end
Which all the day was not his life's end.

At home in the house of a friend he sat,
I sought to him many a care and sorrow, to which Eye light eyes could daily men abound.

Through waters and through dangers I'll go,
Suffer and I'll see of it too. Shakespeare.

SO'LAKE, n. f. [solaceries, French.] A dilemma in horse.

SO'LAKE, adj. [solace, French; solatus,
Latin.]

1. Being of the sun.

The compasses that make up the beams of light be fiducial cylinders, or rather particles of fine ethereal substance, striding on one another in a the lucid body. Lucretius.

Instead of golden fruits,
By genial showers and solar heat supplied;
Unfavourable winter hath defac'd
Earth's blooming charms, and made a barren waste. Blackmore.

2. Belonging to the sun.

They denominated some herbs solar, and some lunar. Bacon.

Scripture hath been punctual in other records, concerning solar morals. Bacon.

3. Born under or in the predominant influence of the sun.

The cook was pleas'd to hear him speak to fair,
And proud beheld, as solar people are. Deppen.

4. Measured by the sun.

The rule to find the moon's age, on any day of any solar month, can not but be precisely an exact account of the moon, because of the inequality of the motions of the sun and moon, and the number of days of the solar months. Holler.

SOLD, The pret, and part, pass, of sell.

SOLD, n. f. [souldie, old Fr. Trevoux.]

As if the world should cleave, and that flame men Should solder up the rift. Shakespeare.

Then visible god,
That sold up close up disabilities,
And mure them in kids. Shakespeare.

Learn'd he was in med'cal lore;
For he had a pouch he wore
People with strange hermetick powder,
That wounds and holes point-blank would solder.

The naked cynck's jar never flames; it broken,
The quickly solder'd on a new betoken. Deppen.

At the seldom, the profane runs, with other foes, did not mure and solder up their several injuries, to pay for the church. Sigt.

SOLDIER, n. f. [from the verb.] Metallick cement. A metallick body that will mure with less heat than the body to be solder'd.

one who is paid for his service. Shakespeare.

You soldier, the better to serve,
Go to the wars. Shakespeare.

And soldier and soldier have none. Shakespeare.

1. To be a soldier; to be a man of war.
To be a soldier, to be a man of war, to be a soldier, to be a man of war, to be a soldier, to be a man of war. Shakespeare.

A hateful service, that dissolv'd the knees
Of every a soldier. Chapman

I have not yet forgot I am a king;

If I have wrong'd thee, charge me face to face;

I have not yet forgot I am a soldier. Dryden

2. It is generally used of the common men, and distinct from the commanders.

It is so meet that any one, before he came to be a captain, should have been a soldier. Spenser

SOLDIERLIKE. } adj. [ soldier and like. ]

SOLDIERLY. } Martial; military;

becoming a soldier.

Altho' that at the first he had fought with believe to be a soldier, yet his practice had now made him comparable to the best. Shakespeare

I will maintain the word with my sword to be a soldier's word, and a word of good command.

Shakespeare

They, according to a soldierly custom, in excess of extremity, by interchange of a kiss by every other upon the sword of others, fed a resolution to maintain the place. Hawes

Their eyes as well as hands confessed, that it was as soldierly an action as had been performed on either side. Clarendon

SOLDIERSHIP. n. f. [from soldier.] Military character; martial qualities; behaviour becoming a soldier; martial skill.

Thy valor and my self in friendship
Fought out a soldier'ship, he did look far Into the secret of the time, and was Displeased of the heaven. Shakespeare

By sea you throw away

The absolute soldier'ship you have by land,

Distinct your army, which hath most confit

Of war mark'd footmen. Shakespeare

SOLDIERY. n. f. [from soldier.]

1. Body of military men; soldiers collectively.

The Memphis soldiery,

That swell'd the Egyptian war, when wall'd,

The unfrozen waters marvelously flood. Philips

SOLF. n. f. [ solum, Latin. ]

1. The bottom of the foot.

I will only be bold with Benedict for his company; for from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot he is all worth. Shakespeare

Ticking is most in the soles of the feet; the cause is, the rareness of being touched there. Bacon

The soles of the feet have it in affinity with the head and the mouth of the stomach; as going wet-shod, to those that use it not, affects both. Bacon

Such resting found the sole of mislaid feet. Milt

In the make of the camel's foot, the sole is flat and broad, being very fleshy, and covered only with a thick, soft, and somewhat callous skin, fit to travel in sandy places. Ray

2. The foot.

To redeem thy woful parent's head
From tyrant's rage and ever dying dread,
Hast wander'd through the world now long a day,
Yet earnest not thy woful sole to lead. F. Queen

Milton

Nor then the solemn nightingale ceas'd warbling.

Milton

5. Grave; affectedly serious.

When Steel reflects upon the many solemn strong barriers to our succellion, of laws and oaths, he thinks all for vanities: so do I, provided the epithet solemn goes for nothing, because, though I have heard of a solemn day, and a solemn cockcomb, yet I can conceive no idea of a solemn harrier. Swift

SOLEMNITY. } n. f. [ solemnitas, Fr. from

SOLEMNITY. } solemn. ]

1. Ceremony or rite annually performed.

Were these annual solemnities only practised in the church? Nelson

Though the days of solemnity, which are but few, must quickly finish that outward exercise of devotion which appertains to such times; yet they increase men's inward dispositions to virtue for the present, and, by their frequent returns, bring the same to length to perfection. Argente

Great was the cause; our old solemnities

From no blind zeal or fond tradition rise;

But, sav'd from death, our Argives yearly pay

These grateful honours to the god of day. Pope

2. Religious ceremony.

3. Awful ceremony or procession.

The lady Contance,

Some speedily no longer bid repair

To our solemnity. Shakespeare

The moon, like to a silver bow

New bent in heaven, shall behold the night

Of our solemnities. Shakespeare

There may be greater danger in using such con-positions in churches, at arrangements, plays, at solemnities. Bacon

What fun'd pomp shall floating Tiber see,

When rising from his bed he views the sad solemnity? Dryden

Though the forms and solemnities of the judgment may bear some resemblance to those are acquainted with here, yet the rule of proce-ding shall be very different. Atterbury

Your gracious self to take on you the charge
And kindly government of this your land. Shaksp.

How he solicits heaven
Himself best knows; but strangely visited people,
The more despair of surgery, he cures. Shakespeare.

Did I request thee, Maker! from my clay
To mold me man? Did I solicit thee
From darkness to promote me? Milton.

The cardinal of my faith to false did prove,
As thou dost me with lawless love. Druiden.
To call to action; to summon; to awake;
to excite.

This supernatural soliciting
Cannot be ill, cannot be good. Shakespeare.
Sweet Henry with her wondrous prattle;
Plink thee on her virtues that bounteous

Be not in graves, that extinguish
That that solicited her languishing eye. Milton.
Solicits and some trougible qualities solicit their proprietors, and force an entrance to the mind.
Locke.

He is solicited by popular custom to indulge himself in forbidden liberties. Rogers

SONNET, n. f. [sonnet, French; sonnetto, Italian.]

1. A short poem consisting of fourteen lines, of which the rhymes are adjusted by a particular rule. It is not very suitable to the English language; and has not been used by any man of eminence since Milton, of whose sonnets this is a specimen.

A book was writ of late call'd Tetrachordon, And woven close, both matter, form, and stile; The subject new; it walk'd the town a-whole, Numbering good intellects, now seldom port'd on; Once the stall reader, bless us, what a word on A title-page is that! and some in file stand spelling false, while one might walk to Mile-End-green. Why is it harder, first, than Gordon, Colkitts, or Macdonnell, or Galafre Those rugged names to our like mouths grow sleek.

That would have made Quintilian stare and gasp: Thy age, like ours, foul of us John Cheek, He'd not learning worse than toad or asp, When thou taught'st Cambridge and king Edward Greek. Milton.

2. A small poem.

Let us into the city presently, To fort some gentlemen well skill'd in musick; I have a sonnet that will serve the turn. Shaksp.

SONNETTER, n. f. [sonnetter, Fr. from sonnet.] A small poet, in contempt.

Alas me, poor extemporal god of rhyme; for I am sure I shall turn sonnetter. Shakspere.

There are as many kinds of gardening as of poetry: your makers of parterres and flower-gardens are epigrammatists and sonnetters in this art. Spectator.

What wouldst thou this madrigal would be, To be lov'd by'd hackney sonnetter or me! But let a lord once own the happy lines, How the wondrous brightens! how the style refines! Pope.

SONOROUS, adj. [sonus and fero, Lat.] Giving a ringing sound.

This will appear, let the subject matter of sounds be what it will; either the atmosphere, or the ethereal part thereof, or soniferous particles of bodies. Derham.

SONORIFICK, adj. [sonorus and facio, Lat.] Producing sound.

If he should ask me why a clack strikes, and points to the hour; and I should say, it is by an indicating form and sonorifick quality, this would be unsatisfactory. Watts.

SONOROUS, adj. [junore, Fr. sonorus, Latin.]

1. Loud sounding; giving loud or shrill sound. Bodies are distinguished as sonorous or unsonorous. All the while

Sonorous metal blowing martial sounds; At which the universal host went A shout that tore hell's concave. Milton.

2. High sounding; magnificent of sound. The Italian opera, amidst all the meannets and familiarity of the thoughts, has something beautiful and sonorous in the expression. Addison.

The vowels are sonorous. Dryden.

SONOROUSLY, adv. [from sonorous.] With high sound; with magnificence of sound.

SONOROUSNESS, n. f. from sonorous.]

1. The quality of giving sound. Enquiring of a maker of viols and lutes of what age he thought lutes ought to be, to attain their full and best seasoning for sonorousness, he replied, That in some twenty years would be requisite, and in others forty. Boyle.

2. Magnificence of sound.

SOON, adv. [sun, Gothick; rona, Sax. juen, Dutch.]

1. Before long time be past; shortly after any time assigned or supposed.

Nor did they not perceive their evil ways, Yet to their general's voice they soon obey'd. Milt.

You must obey me, soon or late; Why should you vainly struggle with your fate? Dryden.

2. Early; before any time supposed: opposed to late.

O boy! thy father gave thee life too soon, And hath bereft thee of thy life too late. Shaksp.

Do this, that I may be restored to you the sooner. Hebrews.

How is it that you are come so soon to-day? Exodus.

The earlier stayeth for the later, and not that the later cometh sooner. Bacon.

3. Readily; willingly.

I would us soon see a river winding through woods and meadows, as when it is toll'd up in to many whimsical figures at Versailles. Addison.

4. It has in Sidney the signification of an adjective, whether licitiously or according to the custom of his time.

He hath preserved Argulus alive, under pretence of having him publicly executed after these wars, of which they hope for a soon and prosperous issue. Sidney.

5. Soon as. Immediately; at the very time.

As soon as he came nigh unto the camp, he saw the hall and the dance. Exodus.

Nor was his virtue poison'd, soon as born, With the too early thoughts of being king. Dryden.

Feasts, and business, and pleasures, and enjoyments, seem great things to us, whilst we think of nothing else; but as soon as we add death to them, they all sink into an equal littleness. Law.

SOONLY, adv. [from soon.] Quickly; speedily. This word I remember in no other place; but if soon be, as it seems once to have been, an adjective, soonly is proper.

A soonly meets with a stone that wants no cutting, and, soonly approving of it, places it in his work. Milton.

SOOPERARY, n. f. [sepindus, Latin.] A plant.

SOOT, n. f. [rot, Saxon; soot, Thendick; soot, Dutch.] Condensed or embodied smoke.

Soot, though thin spread in a field, is a very good compost. Bacon.

If the fire be not kept within the tunnel of the chimney, and some appointed to sweep down the soot, the house will be in danger of burning. Howell.

Of they assay'd, Hunger and thirst constraining; drug'd as oft With hatefullest distill'd, with'd their jaws, With soot and cinders fill'd.

Our household gods, that droop upon our hearts, Each from his venerable face shall brush The Macedonian soot, and thence again. Dryden.

SOOTED, adj. [from soot.] Smeared, manured, or covered with soot.

The land was sooted before. Mortimer.

SOOTERKIN, n. f. A kind of false birth fabled to be produced by the Dutch women from sitting over their stoves.

When Jove was, from his teenning head, Of wit's fair goddess brought to bed, There follow'd at his lying-in, For after-birth, a sooterkine. Swift.

SOOTH, n. f. [roð, Sax.] Truth; reality. Obsolete.

Sir, understand you this of me in sooth, The youngest daughter, whom you hearken for, Her father keeps from all access of suitors, Until the elder sister first be wed. Shakspere.

He looks like sooth; he says he loves my daughter, I think so too; for never gnaw'd the anem Upon the water, as he'll stand and read My daughter's eyes. Shakspere.

If I have any skill in soothsaying, as in sooth I have none, it doth prognosticate that I shall change caps. Camden.

The very sooth of it is, that an ill-habit has the force of an ill fate. L'Estrange.

I did not mean to chide you; For, sooth to say, I hold it noble in you To cherish the distressed. Rover.

SOOTH, adj. [roð, Sax.] Pleasing; delightful.

Some other means I have, Which once of Melibæus old I learn'd, The soothful shepherd that e'er pip'd on plains. Milton.

SOOTH, n. f. Sweetness; kindness. This seems to be the meaning here.

That e'er this tongue of mine, That laid the sentence of dread banishment On yond proud man, should take it off again With words of sooth! Shakspere.

To SOOTH, v. a. [zerodian, Saxon.]

1. To flatter; to please with blandishments.

In soothings them, we nourish 'gainst our sense The corble of rebellion, insolence, sedition. Shaksp.

Can I sooth tyranny? Seem pleas'd to see my royal master murder'd, His crown usurp'd, a distaff in the throne? Dryden.

By his fair daughter is the chief confus'd, Who sooths to dear delight his anxious mind, Successless all her suit on eff's prove, To banish from his breast his country's love. Pope.

Thanks be that Memnon, soldier as he is, Thoughtless and dull, will listen to his soothings. Rover.

I've tried the force of every reason on him, Sooth'd and carol'd, been angry, sooth'd again; I said safety, life, and interest in his fight; But all are vain, he seems them all for Cato. Addison.

2. To calm; to soften; to mollify. The boldness

Sooths her with blandishments, and frights with threats. Dryden.

3. To gratify; to please. This calm'd his cares; sooth'd with his future name. And pleas'd to hear his propagated name. Dryden.

SOOTHER, n. f. [from sooth.] A flatterer; one who gains by blandishments.

I cannot better: I defy
The tongue of foothers. Shakespeare
To SOOTHY. v. n. [footh and say.] To pretend to foretell.

A footh, possessed with a spirit of divination, not as which brought her masters much gain by foothsaying. Arts.

SOOTHY. n. f. [from soothsay.] A foreteller; a predictor; a prognosticator.

Scarcely was Mufidorus made partaker of this oft blinding light, when there were found numbers of foothsayers, who affirmed strange and incredible things should be performed by that child. Sidney.
A foothsayer bids you beware the ideo of March.

He was animated to expect the papacy by the prediction of a foothsayer, that one should succeed Pope Leo, whose name should be Adrian, an aged man of mean birth, and of great learning and wisdom. Bacon

SOOTHINESS. n. f. [from sooty.] The quality of being sooty; fuliginousness.

SOOTY. adj. [from soot.]

1. Bred of soot.
By fire of sooty coal th' alchymist turns Metals to gold. Milton.

2. Consisting of soot; fuliginous.
There may be some chymical way to to defecate
this oil, that it shall not spend into a sooty matter. Wilkins.

3. Black; dark; dusky.
All the grisly legions that troop
Under the sooty flag of Acheron; Harpies and hydras, and all monstrous forms. Milton.

Swift on his sooty pinions flits the guinea,
And in a vapour reach'd the gloomy dome. Pope.
To SOOTY. v. n. [from soot.] To make black with soot.

Then (for his own weeds) shirt and coat all rent,
Tumb'd and all sooted with noisome smoke
She put him on, and over all a cloak. Chapman.
SOP. n. f. [prop. Saxon; sopa, Spanish; soppe, Dutch.]

1. Any thing steeped in liquor, commonly to be eaten.

The bounded waters
Would lift then bosoms higher than the shores,
And make a sop of all this solid globe. Shakespeare.
Draw, you rogue! for though it be night, yet the moon shines: I'll make a sop of th' moonshine of you. Shakespeare.

Sop, in wine, quantity for quantity, inebriate more than wine of itself. Bacon
1. Any thing given to pacify, from the sop given to Cerberus.

The prudent Sibyl had before prepar'd
A sop, in honey steep'd, to charm the guard;
Which, mix'd with powerful drugs, the cast before the greedy grinning jaws, just op'd to roar. Dryden.
All nature is not cur'd with a sop; quarrelsome men, as well as quarrelsome curs, are worse for fair usage. L'Estrange.

To Cerberus they give a sop,
His triple barking mouth to sop. Suif.

To SOP. v. a. To sleep in liquor.

SOP. n. f. [See SOAP.]

SOPH. n. f. [from sophista, Latin.] A young man who has been two years at the university.

Three Cambridge sophs and three port templars came,
The same their talents, and their tastes the same;
Each prompt to query, answer, and debate,
And smit with love of poesy and prate. Pope.

SOPHA. n. f. [Persian.] The emperor of Persia.

By this scimitar
That flew the sophi and a Persian prince. Shaksp.
A fig for the sultan and sophi. Congreve.

SOPHISM. n. f. [sophisma, Lat.] A fallacious argument; an unsound subtilty; a fallacy.

When a false argument puts on the appearance of a true one, then it is properly called a sophism or fallacy. Watts.

I, who as yet was never known to show
Falsa pity to premeditated woe,
Will graciously explain great nature's laws,
And hear thy sophisms in to plain a cause. Harte.

SOPHIST. n. f. [sophista, Lat.] A professor of philosophy.

The court of Cretus is said to have been much resorted to by the sophists of Greece, in the happy beginning of his reign. Temple.

SOPHISTER. n. f. [sophiste, Fr. sophista,
Latin.]

1. A disputant fallaciously subtle; an artful but insidious logician.

A subtle traitor needs no sophister. Shakespeare.
If a heathen philosopher brings arguments from reason, which none of our atheistical sophisters can confute, for the immortality of the soul, I hope they will so weigh the consequences, as neither to talk nor live as if there was no such thing. Denham.

Not all the subtle objections of sophisters and rabblers, against the gospel, so much prejudiced the reception of it, as the reproach of those crimes with which they aspersed the assemblies of christians. Rogers.

2. A professor of philosophy; a sophist.
This sense is antiquated.

Alecidemus the sophister hath arguments to prove, that voluntary and extemporal far excell'd premeditated speech. Hobbes.

SOPHISTICAL. adj. [sophistique, Fr. from sophist.] Fallaciously subtle; logically deceitful.

Neither know I whether I should prefer for madness, and sophistical courage, that the tame body of Christ should be in a thousand places at once of this sublimity world. Hall.

When the state of the controversy is well understood, the difficulty will not be great in giving answers to all his sophistical cavils. Stillingfleet.
That may seem a demonstration for the present, which to posterity will appear a mere sophistical knot. More.

SOPHISTICALLY. adv. [from sophistical.]
With fallacious subtilty.

Bolingbroke argues most sophistically. Swift.

To SOPHISTICATE. v. a. [sophistiquer, Fr. from sophist.] To adulterate; to corrupt with something spurious.

If the passions of the mind be strong, they easily sophistate the understanding; they make it apt to believe upon every slender warrant, and to imagine unfalsifiable truth where scarce any probable thing appeareth. Hobbes.

Here's three of us are sophistated. Shakespeare.
Divers experiments succeeded not, becaus they were at one time tried with genuine waters, and at another time with sophistated ones. Hobbs.

The only passions amongst the heathens, who sophistated nature and philosophy, were the fancies; who assumed a total, unchangeable consideration of causes, reaching even to the events of man's will. Smith.

Yet the rich culchies may their hoarding spare,
They purchase but sophistated ware.

'Tis prodigality that buys a deceit,
Where both the giver and the taker cheat. Dryden.

The eye hath its coats and humours sophistated and colourless, lest it should tinge and sophistate
The light that it lets in by a natural jaundice. Bentley.

SOPHISTICATE. part. adj. [from the verb.] Adulterate; not genuine.

Wine sparkles brighter far than the,
'Tis pure and right, without deceit,

And that no woman e'er will be;
No, they are all sophistated. Cowley.

Since then a great part of our scientific treasure is most likely to be adulterated, though all bears the image and superscription of truth, the only way to know what is sophistated and what is not, is to bring all to the examen of the touchstone. Blamville.

So truth, when only one supplied the truth,
Grew scarce and dear, and yet sophistated. Dryden.

SOPHISTICATION. n. f. [sophistication, Fr. from sophisticate.] Adulteration;
not genuineness.

Sophistication is the act of counterfeiting or adulterating any thing with what is not to good, but the sake of unlawful gain. Quincy.

The drugs and simples sold in shops generally are adulterated by the fraudulent services of the sellers, especially if the practitioners may make their sophistication very beneficial. Boyle.

Besides every submission to sophistications of sense, we have ability to prevent the inducements of our junior reasoners. Clamville.

SOPHISTICATION. n. f. [from sophisticate.]
Adulteration; one that makes things not genuine.

SOPHISTRY. n. f. [from sophist.]

1. Fallacious ratiocination.

His sophistry prevailed; his father believed. Sidney.

These men have obscured and confounded the natures of things by their false principles and wretched sophistry; though an act be never so in-sol, they will strip it of its guilt. South.

2. Logical exercise.
The more youthful exercises of sophistry, themes and declamations. Felton.

To SOPORATE. v. n. [soporo, Lat.] To lay asleep. Dick.

SOPORIFEROUS. adj. [sopor and fero.]
Productive of sleep; causing sleep; nar-cotick; opiate; dormitive; somniferous; anodyne; sleepy.

The particular ingredients of those magical ointments are opiate and soporiferous; for anointing of the forehead, neck, feet, and back-bone, procures deed sleeps. Bacon.

While the whole operation was performing, they in a profound sleep, by the force of that soporiferous medicine infused into my liquor. Swift.

SOPORIFEROUSNESS. n. f. [from soporiferous.] The quality of causing sleep.

SOPORIFICK. adj. [sopor and facio.]
Causing sleep; opiate; narcotick.

The colour and taste of opium are, as well as its soporifick or anodyne nature, mere powers depending on its primary qualities. Larke.

SOPPER. n. f. [from sop.] One that sleeps any thing in liquor.

SORBE. n. f. [sorbum, Lat.] The berry of the foib or service tree.

act of drinking or sipping.

SORCERER. n. f. [sorcerer, Fr. fortarius, low Lat.] A conjurer; an enchanter;
a magician.

They say this town is full of sorcerage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Prong-working forgers that change the mind,
Soul-killing witchers that deform the body.

And in thy such like liberties of sin. Shakespeare.
The wondrous of the power of witch upon kings and magistrates may be ascribed to the weakness of imagination; for it is hard for a witch or sorcerer to put on a belief that they can hurt men. Bacon.

He saw a false sorcerer arise,
All sudden gorgeous hits, and dragons glare.

And ten horn'd fiends. Pope.

The Egyptian sorcerers contended with Moses;
but the wonders which Moses wrought did so far transcend the power of magicians, as made them confess it was the finger of God. Watts.

SORCERESS. n. f. [female of sorcerer.] A female magician; an enchantress.

Bring forth that sorceress condemn'd to burn. Shakespeare.

1. A blockhead; a dull, ignorant, stupid fellow; a dolt.

Of the soot service of his son

When I soot him, then he call'd me soot,

And told me I had turn'd the wrong side out.

Either our brags

Were crack'd of kitchen trulls, or his desert.

Provd us unpeaking soots.

Soul blinded soot, that creep

In dirt, and never saw the wonders of the deep.

Tell him that no history or antiquity can match

his conduct; and presently the soot, because he knows neither history nor antiquity, shall begin to mislead himself by himself, which is the only way for him not to fall short.

2. A wretch stupified by drinking.

That calls the staring soot to nasty wine.

A furly ill-bred lord,

That chides and snaps her up at every word;

fortune, procured the king, by his letters-patent under the great seal, to appoint the lady Jane to succeed him in the inheritance of the crown.

Atheism is impudent in pretending to philosophy;

and superstition sovereignly ignorant, in fancying that the knowledge of nature tends to religion.

Sovereignly to taste the purest pleasures and comforts of this world, and forego the expectation of immortality in another; and to desperately to run the risk of dwelling with everlasting burnings, plainly discovers itself to be the most pernicious folly and deplorable madness in the world.

SO'VEIGNNESS. n. f. [from sovereign.]

1. Dulness; stupidity; insensibility.

Sometimes phlegm putridifies into sovereignness, sovereignness into an ignorance or neglect of all religion.

SOVEREIGN. n. f. See SOVEREIGN.

SOVEREIGN. adj. [from sovereign, Fr. sovrano, Spanish.]

1. Supreme in power; having no superior.

As teaching bringeth us to know that God is our supreme truth; to prayer testifieth that we acknowledge him our sovereign good.

You, my sovereign lady,

Canst thou have laid disgrace on my head.

None of us who now thy grace implore,

But hold the rank of sovereign queen before;

Till giddy chance, whose music never ceases

That mortal bliss should last for length of years,

Call us down headlong from our high estate.

Whether I am, then, were a vassal to Jacob,

and Jacob his sovereign prince by birthright, I leave the reader to judge.

2. Supremely efficacious; predominant over diseases.

A memorial of fidelity and zeal, a sovereign preservative of God's people from the venomous infection of heresy.

The most sovereign prescription in Galen is but expensive; and, to this preservative, of no better report than a horse drench.

Love-wounded Protheus,

My bosom, as a bed,

Shall lodge thee, till thy wound be thoroughly heal'd,

And thus I search it with a sovereign kiss.

A water we call water of paradise, by that we do to it, is made very sovereign for health.

Like the fern sovereign men did draw

From parboil'd shoes and boots, and all the rest

Which were with any sovereign fetters blest.

Be cool, my friend, and hear my mule dispend

Some sovereign comforts drawn from common sense.

SOVEREIGN. n. f. Supreme lord.

O, let my sovereign turn away his face,

And bid his ears a little while be deaf.

By my sovereign, and his love, I swear,

Remov'd for faith in peace, for force in war,

On our alliance other I needs did.

SOVEREIGNLY. adv. [from sovereign.]

Supremely; in the highest degree.

He was sovereignly lovely in his heart.

SOVEREIGNTY. n. f. [from sovereign, Fr.]

Supremacy; highest place; supreme power; highest degree of excellence.

Give me pardon,

That I, your vassal, have employ'd and paid

Your unknown sovereignty.

Happy were England, would this virtuous prince

Take on his grace the sovereignty thereof.

To give laws unto a people, to institute magistrates and officers over them; to punish and pardon malefactors; to have the sole authority of making war and peace, are the true marks of sovereignty.

A mighty hunter thence he shall be fill'd

Before the Lord; as in despite of heav'n,

Or from heav'n, claiming second sovereignty.

Nothing does so gratify a baughty humour, as this piece of usurp'd sovereignty over our brethren.

Government of the Tongue.

That holds the woods in awful sovereignty,

Requires a depth of lodging in the ground;

High as his topmost boughs to heav'n ascend,

So low his roots to hell's dominion tend.

I will beseech, where'er thy fate I find,
That I may much-lov'd sovereignty find.
And hence new beauty may thy looks increase.

Let as above all things pass'd our souls with in-ful apprehensions of the majesty and sovereignty of God.

Alexander's Grecian colonies in the Indies were almost exterminated by Sandrocoatus, Seleucus recovered the sovereignty in some degree, but was forced to abandon to him the country along the Indus.

SOUGHT. n. f. [from sought, French.] A subterraneous drain.

Yet could not such mines, without great pains and charges, if at all, be wrought; the delts would be so flown with waters, it being impossible to make any adds or soughts to drain them, that no power machines could suffice to lay and keep them dry.

Another was found in sinking a sought-pit.

SOUGHT. The pret. and part. pass. of sought.

I am sought of them that asked not for me. I am found of them that sought me not.

SOUL. n. f. [from soul, Saxon; soel, Danish,

soel, Islandick; soel, Dutch.]

1. The immaterial and immortal spirit of man.

When death was overcome, he opened heaven as well to the believing Gentiles as Jews; heaven is then was no receptacle to the souls of either.

Perhaps, for want of food, the soul may pine.

But that were strange, since all things bad and good

Since all God's creatures mortal and divine,

Since God himself, is his eternal food.

He remembered them of the promises, seals, and oaths, which by public authority had passed for concluding this marriage; that these, being religious bonds betwixt God and their souls, could not by any politic act of state be dissolved.

So natural is the knowledge of the soul's immortal, and of some soul for the future reception of it, that we find some tract or other of it in most barbarous nations.

2. Intellectual principle.

Eloquence the soul charms the sense.

The eyes of our souls only then begin to see,

when our bodily eyes are closing.

3. Vital principle.

Thou almost mak'st me waver in my faith,

To hold opinion with Pythagoras,

That souls of animals migrate themselves

Into the trunks of men.

Thou art, of this great world both eye and soul.

Join voices, all ye living souls! ye birds,

That singing up to heaven-gate ascend,

Learn on your wings, and in your notes, his praise.

In common discourse and writing we leave out the words vegetative, sensitive, and rational, and make the word soul serve for all these principles.

4. Spirit; essence; quintessence; principal part.

He has the very soul of bounty.

Charity, the soul of all the rest.

5. Interior power.

There is some soul of goodness in things evil,

Would men observingly distil it out.

6. A familiar appellation expressing the qualities of the mind.

Three wenches where I stood, cry'd,

"Alas, good soul!"

This is a poor mad soul; and the tays, up and down the town, that her eldest son is like you.

The poor soul sat singing by a sycamore tree,

Sing all a green willow:

Her hand on her bosom, her head on her knee.

Keep the poor soul no longer in suspense.

Your charge is such as does not need defence.

Unenlarged souls are disgusted with the vision of the microscope, discovering animals which equal not a pepper-corn.

Healthful being.
The most is the case of every soul of us.
L'Estrange.
It is a republic; there are in it a hundred bourgeois, and about a thousand souls. Addison.
My state of health none care to learn;
My life is here no fool's concern. Swift.
Active power.
Earth, air, and seas through empty space would rowl.
And heav'n would fly before the driving soul.
Dryden.

Spirit; fire; grandeur of mind.
That he wants caution, he must needs confess;
But not a hint, to give our arms success. Young.
Intelligent being in general.
Every soul in heav'n shall bend the knee. Milton.
C. LIDER. See SOLDIER.
C. LIDER, adj. [from soul.] Furnished with mind.
Grave, and still tenacious of thy hold, Whit thou the Grecian chiefs, though largely foul'd,
Should give the prizes they had gain'd before?
Dryden.

SPITLESS, adj. [from soul.] Mean; low;
spiritless.
Slave, joulist villain, dog, O rarely base!

SHOT, n. f. [from soul and met.] Something paid for a soul's requiem among the Romanists.

In the Sax-on times there was a funeral duty to be paid, called, pecunia sepulchralis & symbolum mortis, and in Saxon soulshot. Aylmer.

SOUND, adj. [from sund, Saxon.] Healthy; hearty; not morbid; not defeated; not hurt.

I am fall'n out with my more headier will,
To take the indispos'd and sickly lit
For the sound man. Shakespeare.

He hath a heart as sound as a bell, and his tongue the clapper; for what his heart thinks, his tongue speaks. Shakespeare.

He hath received him safe and sound. Luke.

We can preserve
Subvert our minds, and understanding sound. Mill.

The king visits all around,
Comforts the sick, congratulates the sound;
Honours the princely chiefs. Dryden.

But Cypri, and the rest of founder mind,
The fatal present to the flames design'd,
Do to the deep. Dryden.

When a word, which originally signifies any particular object, is attributed to several other objects, in account of some evident reference or relation to the original idea, this is peculiarly called an analogical word; so a sound or healthy pulse, a sound constitution, sound sleep, are all so called, with reference to a sound and healthy constitution; but if we speak of sound doctrine, or sound speech, this is a way of resemblance to health, and the words are metaphorical. Watts.

Right; not erroneous; orthodox.

Whom although to know be life, and joy to make known of his name; yet our foundest knowledge is to know that we know him not as he is, he is, either can know him, and our safest coquenee concerning him is silence. Hooker.

Let my heart be found in thy statutes. Psalms.
Sound, and yet not trivial, catechetic institution. Felton.

The rules are sound and useful, and may serve for devotion. Wake.

Stout; strong; lusty.

The men are very strong and able of body; and therefore either give sound strokes with their clubs, or with their light, or else snout strong shots with their bows. Abbot.

Valid; not failing.

They reserved their rules, tenures, and signories whole and found to themselves. Spenser.

Fast; hearty. It is applied to sleep.

Now wak'd from found sleep,
Not on the flow'ry bed I found me laid
In balmy sweet. Milton.

SOUND, adv. Soundly; heartily; completely fast.

The messenger approaching to him spake,
But his waste words return'd to him in vain;
So sound he slept that nought might him awake.

SOUND, n. f. [sonde, French.] A shallow sea, such as may be sounded.

The found of Denmark, where thaps pay toll.
Camden

Wake.
Behold I come, sent from the Stygian found,
As a dire vapour that had of it the ground,
To hugender with the night, and blait the day.

Then young Thais bore, the bright meretric
Of Phoreys, drenched in the founds and seas. Pope.

SOUND, n. f. [sonde, French.] A probe, an instrument used by chirurgeons to feel what is out of reach of the fingers.

The patient being laid on a table, put the found till it meet with some resistance. Scarp.

To SOUND, v. a.

1. To search with a plummet; to try depth.
In this secret there is a gulf, which since we have we shall never found. Hooker.

You are, Hasting, much too shallow
To f and the bottom of the after times. Shaksp.

2. To try; to examine.

Has he never before founded you in this business?
Shakspere

Invites these lords, and those he meant to found

I was in jest,
And by that offer meant to found your breath

I've founded my Numidian man by mine.

And find 'em ripe for a revolt. Addison

To SOUND, v. n. To try with the sounding line.

The shipmen deemed that they drew near to some country, and founded, and found it near twenty fathoms.

Beyond this we have no more a positive distinct notion of infinite space than a mariner has of the depth of the sea, where having let down a large portion of his sounding line, he reaches no bottom.

SOUND, n. f. [siipa, Latin.] The cattle-fish. Answorth.

SOUND, n. f. [son, Fr. sonus, Latin.]

1. Any thing audible; a noise; that which is perceived by the ear.

Heaps of huge words uphoarded hideously
With horrid found, though having little sense,
And thereby wanting due intelligence,
Have man'd the face of woody poetry,
And made a number of their faculty.

Come, inter, cheer us up his fighths,
And show the best of our delights;
I'll charm the air to give a found.

While you perform your antick round. Shakspere

Doth a time ago in a stone in the bottom of the water, and it maketh a found; to a long pale truck up or gravel, in the bottom of the water, maketh a found.

The warlike found of trumpets loud

When'er he spoke, his voice was heard around.

Loud as a trumpet with a silver found

That which is conveyed into the brain by the ear is called found, though, all it admit the perceptive part, it be nothing but motion.

2. Mere empty noise opposed to meaning.

He contented himself with doubtful and general terms, which might make no ill found in men's ears.

Let us consider this proposition as to its meaning; for it is the sense and not found that must be the principle.

O lavish land! for found at such expence?
But then, the fates it in her bills for sense.

To SOUND, v. n.

1. To make a noise; to emit a noise.

Trumpet once more to found at general doom.

That with one blast through the whole host does bound,
And first taught speaking-trumpets how to found.

Thither the silver sounding lyres
Shall call the tuning, loves and young desires.

2. To exhibit by found, or likenesses of found

Why do you start, and seem to fear
Things that do found to us?

They being told there was small hope of cure
To be expected to their evils from hence,
Were willing at the first to give an ear
To any thing that sounded liberty.

This relation found rather like a chymical dream than a philosophical truth.

3. To be conveyed in found.
From you founded out the word of the Lord.

To SOUND, v. a.

1. To cause to make a noise; to play on.
And many nymphs about them flocking round,
And many tritons which then hours did found.

Michael had found
The archangel trumpet.

Alcimus lay, none to renew'd
The warrior trumpet in the field to found;
With breasting boats to kindle fierce alarms,
And route to dare their fate in honourable arms.

2. To betoken or direct by a found.
Once Jove from Ida and both bolts survey,
And, when he pleas'd to thunder, part the fray;
Here heav'n in vain that kind retreat should found,
The leader common had the thunder down'd.

3. To celebrate by found.
Sun, found his praise.

SOUND BOARD, n. f. [from sound and board.] Board which propagates the sound in organs.
Try it without any foundboard along, only harp-wire at one end of the string.
As in an organ, from one blast of wind,
To many a row of pipes the foundboard breathes.

SOUNDING, adj. [from sound.] Sonorous;
having a magnificent found.
Obsolete words may thereby revived, when more founding or more significant than those in practice.

SOUNDLY, adv. [from sound.]
1. Healthily; heartily.
2. Lustily; stoutly; strongly.
When Duncan is asleep,
Where to the rather shall this hard day's journey
Soundly invite him.

They did ply
My feet and hands with cords, and to the mast
With other half is made me foundly fast.

Who had to often in your aid
So many ways been foundly paid.
Have no concern,
Provided Fauch, for there's the jest,
Be foundly maul'd, and plague the rest.

Their ability and gentry are one half mired, bambled, or converted: they all foundly feel the smart of the last Irish war.

3. Truly; rightly.
The wiser are always the readiest to acknowledge, that foundly to judge of a fact is the weightiest thing which any man can take upon him.

The doctrine of the church of England, expounded in the thirty-nine articles, is so foundly and orthodoxly settled, as cannot be questioned without extreme danger to our religion.

4. Fast; closely: it is used of sleeping.
Now when that idle dream was in him brought,
Unto that often knight he had been try,
Where he slept foundly, void of evil thought.

When the succession of ideas ceases, our perception of duration ceases with it, which every one experiments whilst he sleeps foundly.

SOULLESS, n. f. [from soul.]

1. Health; heartiness.

I would I had that corporal soulness now,
As when thy father and myself in friendship
First tried our soldiership. Shakespeare.

2. Truth; rectitude; incorrupt state.

In the end, very few excepted, all became subject to the sway of time: other odds there was none amongst them, saving only that some fell sooner away, and some later, from the founder: of belief. Hooker.

Lady is misled in his politics; but he hath given proof of his foundness in religion. Swift.

As the health and strength, or weakness, of our bodies is very much owing to their methods of treating us when we were young, so the foundness or folly of our minds is not less owing to those first teapens and ways of thinking, which we eagerly received from the love, tenderness, authority, and constant conversation of our mothers. Law.

3. Strength; solidity.

This presupposed, it may stand then very well with strength and foundness of reason, even thus to answer. Hobbes.

SOUR, n. f. [soupe, Fr.] Strong decoction of flesh for the table.

Spongy morsels in strong ragouts are found,
And in the jour the thing is down'd. Cow.
Let the cook doubt the bulk of the footman's new herry; or, when he is going up with a dish of soup, let her follow him softly with a ladle-tull. Swift.

SOUR, adj. [rup, runig, Saxon; fur, Welsh.]

1. Acid; austere; pungent on the palate with astringency, as vinegar, or unripe fruit.

All four things, as vinegar, provoke appetite.
Bacon.

Their drink is sour.
But let the bounds of licences be fix'd;
Not things of disagreeing natures mix'd,
Not sweet with sour, nor lards with serpents join'd. Dryden.

Both ways decentful is the wine of power;
When new 'tis heady, and when old tis sour. Harte.

2. Harsh of temper; crabbed; peevish;
rude; severe.

He was a scholar,
Lusty and sour to those that lov'd him not. Shakespeare.

A man of pleasant and popular conversation,
rather free than sour and reserved. Wotton.

Tiberius, otherwise a very sour man, would punctually perform this rite unto others, and expect the same. Brown.

3. Afflictive; painful.

Let me embrace these sour adversities;
For wise men say it is the wisest course. Shakespeare.

4. Expressing discontent.

He said a sour thing to Laura the other day. Tatler.

Sullen and sour, with discontented mien Jocasta frown'd. Pope.

The lord treasurer often looked on me with a sour countenance. Swift.

SOUR, n. f. [from the adjective.] Acid substance.

A thousand sours to temper with one sweet,
To make it seem more dear and dainty. Spenser.

To SOUR, v. a.

1. To make acid.

His angelick nature had none of that carnal
Seven which ferments to the souring of ours. Deay of Piety.

Thus kneaded up with milk, the new made man
His kingdom o'er his kindred world began;
Till knowledge misapplied, misunderstood,
And pride of empire, sour'd his balmy blood. Dryden.

One passion, with a different turn,
Makes wit inflame or anger burn:
So the sun's heat, with different power,
Ropens the grape, the liquor sours. Swift.

2. To make harsh, or unkindly.

Tutts of graft sour land. Mortimer.

3. To make uneasy; to make less pleasing.

Hail, great King!
To give you happiness, I must report
The queen is dead. Shakespeare.

He brought envy, malice, and ambition, into Paradise, which soured to him the sweetness of the place. Dryden.

4. To make discontented.

Not my own disgrace
Hath ever made me sour my patient cheek,
Or bend one wrinkle on my sovereign's face. Shakespeare.

Three crabbed mouths had sour'd themselves to death,
Ere I could make thee open thy white hand. Shakespeare.

In me, as yet ambition had no part;
Pride had not sour'd, nor wrath debas'd, my heart. Harte.

To SOUR, v. n.

1. To become acid.

Asks milk, when it sours in the stomach,
and when turned sour, will purge strongly. Acetabulum.

2. To grow peevish or crabbed.

They kept not melancholy from the virtuous, and under the hatred of vice from souring into lovenity. Addison.

If I turn my eyes from them, or seem displeased,
they sour upon it. Addison.

SOURCE, n. f. [source, Fr.]

1. Spring; fountain; head.

Behind the hidden sources of the Nile. Addison.

2. Original; first cause.

This source of men, while yet but few,
With some regard to what is just and right Shall lead their lives. Milton.

This is the true source and original of this mischief. South.

Of himself is none;
But that eternal Infinite, and one,
Who never did begin, who ne'er can end,
On him all beings, as their source, depend. Dryden.

3. First producer.

Famous Greece,
That source of art and cultivated thought,
Which they to Rome, and Romans thither, brought. Waller.

SOURDET, n. f. [from sourd, Fr.] The little pipe of a trumpet.

SOURISH, adj. [from sour.] Somewhat sour.

By distillation we obtain a sourish spirit, which will dissolve coal. Boyle.

SOURLY, adv. [from sour.]

1. With acidity.

The stern Athenian prince
Then sourly smil'd. Dryden.

SOURNESS, n. f. [from sour.]

1. Acidity; astringency of taste.

Sourness consisteth in some grossness of the body;
and incorporation doth make the mixture of the body more equal, which induceth a milder taste. Bacon.

If the spring, like youth, it yields an acid taste;
But summer doth, like age, the sourness waste. Denham.

He knew
For fruit the grafted pear-tree to disuse,
And tame to plumbs the sourness of the trees. Dryden.

Of acid or sour one has a notion from taste,
sourness being one of those simple ideas which one cannot describe. Asbuthnot.

Has it so sourness, drawn so near its end?
Pope.

2. Asperity; harshness of temper.

Pelagius curped at the curious neatness of men's apparel in those days, and, through the sourness of his disposition, spoke somewhat too harshly thereof. Hooker.

He was never thought to be of that sourness,
sourness, which some men pretend to in religion. King Charles.

Her religion is equally free from the weakness of superstition and the sourness of enthusiasm: a not of an uncomfortably melancholy nature. Addison.

Take care that no sourness and moroseness
gle with our serious frame of mind. Neale.

SOURSOR, n. f. [guanabano, Lat.] A tard-apple.

It grows in several parts of the Spanish We Indies, where it is cultivated for its fruits. Mate.

SOT, n. f. [sot, Fr.] A small denomination of money.

SOUSE, n. f. [soute, salt, Dutch.]

1. Pickle made of salt.

2. Any thing kept parboiled in salt pickle
And he that can rear up a pig on his back,
Hath cheaper his bacon, and sweeter his pork. Tej.

All-faints, do lay for pork and souse,
For sprats and spurlings for your house. Tej.

To SOUSE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To parboil, or steep in pickle.

Oh, though it sink, they drop by drop impart;
But souse the cabbage with a bounteous hand. Py.

2. To throw into water. A ludicrous sense.

They soused me into the Thames with as remote as they drown blind puppies. Shakespeare.

Who those were that run away,
And yet gave out th' had won the day,
Although the rabble soused them for it
O'er head and ears in mind and dirt. Bate.

They soused me over head and ears in water when a boy, so that I am now one of the cate-hardened of the Ironides. Shakespeare.

To SOUSE, v. n. [Of this word I know to the original: it must come from sous, diffous, down, Fr.] To fall as a bird its prey.

Thus on some silver swan or timorous hare,
Jove's bird comes sousing down from upper air,
Her crooked talons truss the fearful prey,
Then out of sight the fowls. Dryden.

Jove's bird will souse upon th' timorous hare,
And tender kids with his sharp talons tear. Dryden.

To SOUSE, v. a. To strike with sudden violence, as a bird strikes his prey.

The gallant monarch is in arms,
And like an eagle o'er his airy towers,
To souse annoyance that comes near his nest. Shakespeare.

SOUSE, adv. With sudden violence.

low word.

Such make a private study of the street,
And, looking full at every man they meet,
Run souse against his claps, who stands amazed,
To find they did not see, but only paid. Yate.

SOUTERRAIN, n. f. [souterain, Fr.] A grotto or cavern in the ground. No English.

Delences against extremities of heat, and grottoes, or souterrains, are necessary parts of health. Arant.

SOUTH, n. f. [ruð, Sax. sud, Dutch
sud, French.]

1. The part where the sun is to us at noon opposed to north.

East and west have no certain points of bearing,
but north and south are fixed; and, for as much southern people have invaded the northern continent. Bo.

2. The southern regions of the globe.

The queen of the south.

From the north to call Deceitful winter, from the south to bring Solstitial summer's heat. Shakespeare.

3. The wind that blows from the south.

All the contagion of the south light on you
You sinners of Rome, you! Shakespeare.

SOUTH. adj. [from the noun.] Southward, meridional.

One hour of delay more is a South for Shakespeare.
How thy garments are worn, when the South doth the earth by the South wind. Job.
Moss while the South wind saile, and with black wings,
Wide hovering, all the elements together drove. Milton.

SOUTH. adv.

1. Toward the south.

His regiment lies half a mile
South from the mighty power of the king. Shakespeare.

2. From the south.

Oh undistinguish'd space of woman's wit! Shakespeare.

This which yields or fills all space. Milton.

Pure space is capable neither of resistance nor motion. Locke.

Space and motion can never be actually infinite: they have a power only and a capacity of being increased without end; so that no space can be assigned so vast, but still a larger may be imagined; no motion so swift or languid, but a greater velocity or slowness may still be conceived. Bentley.

2. Any quantity of place.

I would not be the villain that thou think'st
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich east to boot. Shakespeare.

There was but two ways to escape; the one through the woods, about ten miles space to Widdow.

In such a great ruin, where the fragments are great and hard, it is not possible they should be so adjusted in their fall, but that they would lie hollow, and many unfilled spaces would be intercepted amongst them. Burnet.

Measuring first with careful eyes
The space his spear could reach, aloud he cries. Dryden.

3. Quantity of time.

There is a competent time allowed every man;
and, as it is certain death is the conclusion of it, 'tis possible some space before death. Hammond.

Nine times the space that measures day and night
To mortal men, he with his horrid crew
Lay vanquish'd, rolling in the fiery gulph, Confounded, though immortal. Milton.

In a lever the motion can be continued only for so short a space, as may be answerable to that little distance betwixt the fulcrum and the weight. Wilkins.

God may defer his judgments for a time, and give a people a longer space of repentance: he may stay till the iniquities of a nation be full; but sooner or later they have reason to expect his vengeance. Tillotson.

The lives of great men cannot be writ with any tolerable degree of elegance or exactness, within a short space after their decease. Addison.

4. A small time; a while.

Sith for me ye fight, to me this grace
Both yield, to stay your deadly strife a space. Fairy Queen.

fathom; a span, one eighth; a palm, or hand's breadth, one twenty-fourth; a thumb's breadth, or inch, one seventy-second; and a fore-finger's breadth, one ninety-sixth. Holder.

Will you with counters sum
The vast proportion of his minute,
And buckle in a waste most fathomless,
With spans and inches for diminutive
As fears and reason? Shakespeare.

Sum how brief the life of man
Runs his erring pilgrimage,
That the stretching of a span
Buckles in his sum of age. Shakespeare.

When I removed the one, although but at the distance of a span, the other would stand like Hercules's pillar. Brown.

2. Any short duration,

You have scarce time
To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span,
To keep your earthly audit. Shakespeare.

The virgin's part, the mother, and the wife,
So well the acted in this span of life.
Then conscience, unrestrain'd by fears, began
To stretch her limits, and extend the span. Dryden.

Like a span, I'll every inch enjoy.
To span the hand extended.
On the span of the hand, I'll every inch enjoy.
And span the distance that between us lies. Ticket.

3. To measure.

My span is in life; the span of great content
Hath they'd him gold; my life is span of span. Shakespeare.

This span doth span the world, and hang content
From either pole unto the centre;
Where in each room of the well-furnish'd tent
He lies warm, and without adventure. Shakespeare.

Harry, whose span and well-measur'd span
First taught our span how to span
Words with just note and accent, not to scan
With Midas' ears, counting short and long. Milton.

SPAN. The preterit of spin.

Together furiously they run,
That to the ground came horse and man;
The blood out of their helmets span,

The understanding, as to the exercise of this power, is subject to the command of the will, though, as to the specific nature of its acts, it is determined by the object. South.

By whose direction is the nutriment so regularly distributed into the respective parts, and how are they kept to their specific uniformities? Glanville.

These principles I consider not as occult qualities, supposed to result from the specific forms of things, but as general laws of nature, by which the things themselves are formed; their truth appearing to us by phenomena, though their causes be not yet discovered. Newton.

As all things were formed according to these specific platforms, so their truth must be measured from their conformity to them. Norris.

Specific gravity is the appropriate and peculiar gravity or weight which any species of natural bodies have, and by which they are plainly distinguishable from all other bodies of different kinds. Quincy.

The specific qualities of plants reside in their native spirit, oil, and essential salt: for the water, fixt salt, and earth, appear to be the same in all plants. Arbuthnot.

Specific difference is that primary attribute which distinguishes each species from one another, while they stand ranked under the same general nature or genus. Though wine differs from other liquids, in that it is the juice of a certain fruit, yet this is but a general or generic difference; for it does not distinguish wine from cyder or perry: the specific difference of wine therefore is its pressure from the grape; as cyder is pressed from apples, and perry from pears. Watts.

2. [In medicine.] Appropriated to the cure of some particular distemper. It is usually applied to the arcana, or medicines that work by occult qualities.

The operation of purging medicines has been referred to a hidden propriety, a specific virtue, and the like fusts of ignorance. Bacon.

If the would drink a good decoction of sarsa, with the usual specifics, she might enjoy a good health. Wifeman.

SPECIFICALLY. adv. [from specific.]

In such a manner as to constitute a species; according to the nature of the species.

His faith must be not only living, but lively too; it must be put into a posture by a particular exercise of those several virtues that are specifically requisite to a due performance of this duty. South.

Human reason doth not only gradually, but specifically, differ from the fantastick reason of brutes, which have no conceit of truth, as an aggregate of divers simple concepts, nor of any other universal. Grew.

He must allow that bodies were endowed with the same affections then as ever since; and that, if an axe head be supposed to float upon water, which is specifically lighter, it had been supernatural. Bentley.

To SPECIFY. v. a. [from species and facio, Lat.] To mark by notation of distinguishing particularities.

Man, by the instituted law of his creation, and the common influence of the divine goodness, is enabled to act as a reasonable creature, without any particular, specifying, concurrent, new imputed act of the divine special providence. Hale.

SPECIFICATION. n. f. [from specific; specificatio, Fr.]

1. Distinct notation; determination by a peculiar mark.

This specification or limitation of the question, hinders the disputers from wandering away from the precise point of enquiry. Hale.

2. Particular mention.

The constitution here speaks generally, without the specification of any place. A. B. F.

To SPECIFY. v. a. [from species; specific, French.] To mention; to show by some particular mark of distinction.

As the change of such laws as have been specified is necessary, so the evidence that they are laws must be great. Hale.

St. Peter doth not specify what these waters were. Burnet.

He has there given us an exact geography of Greece, where the countries, and the uses of the soils, are specified. Peck.

SPECIMEN. n. f. [Specimen, Latin.] A sample; a part of any thing exhibited, that the rest may be known.

Several persons have exhibited specimens of the art before multitudes of beholders. Spectator.

SPECIOUS. adj. [specieus, Fr. speciosus Latin.]

1. Showy; pleasing to the view.

The rest, far greater part,
Will deem in outward rites and specious forms Religion satisfied. Milton.

She next I took to wife,
O that I never had! fond with too late!
Was in the vale of Suree, Dalia,
That specious monster, my accomplish'd snare. Milton.

2. Plausible; superficially, not solidly right striking at first view.

Bad men boast

Their specious deeds on earth which glory excite
Or close ambition varnish'd o'er with zeal. Milton.
Somewhat of specious they must have to recommend themselves to princes; for folly will be easily got down in its natural form. Dryden.

Temptation is of greater danger, because it is covered with the specious names of good nature and good manners. Rogers.

This is the only specious objection which our Romish adversaries urge against the doctrine of this church in the point of celibacy. Atterbury.

SPECIOUSLY. adv. [from specious.] With fair appearance.

Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity especially to that perfonated devotion under which any kind of impiety is wont to be disguised, as put off more speciously. Hannay.

SPECK. n. f. [specc, Saxon.] A small discoloration; a spot.

Every speck does not blind a man.

Government of the Tongue

Then are they happy, when
No speck is left of their habitual stains;
But the pure ether of the soul remains. Dryden.
To SPECK. v. a. To spot; to stain with drops.

Flow'r

Carnation, purple, azure, or speck'd with gold. Milton.

SPECKLE. n. f. [from speck.] Small speck; little spot.

To SPECKLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark with small spots.

So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled breast,
And often bounding on the bruised grass
As for great joy of his new comen guest. Fairy Queen.

Speckled vanity

Will sicken soon and die,
And leprous sin will melt from earthly mould. Milton.

Saw'st thou not late a speckled serpent eat
His gilded spires to climb on yon fair tree?
Before this happy minute I was he. Dryden.

The smiling infant in his hand shall take
The cross'd baillist and speckled snake;
Pleas'd the green lustre of the scales survey,
And with their spiky tongue and pointed tail Small play. Peck.

The tortoise here and elephant riding,
Transform'd to combs, the peacock and the white.
Pope.
SPECT or Speight. n. f. A woodpecker.
Ainsworth.

SPECTACLE. n. f. [Speciacle, Fr. Speci-culum, Latin.]

1. A show; a gazing stock; any thing exhibited to the view as eminently remarkable.

In open place produc'd they me,
To be a publick speciacle to all. Shakespeare.
We are made a speciacle unto angels and men.
1 Corinthians.

2. Any thing perceived by the sight.
Forth riding underneath the castle wall,
A doughtful of dead carcases he spy'd,
The dreadful speciacle of that sad house of pride.
Fairy Queen.

When pronouncing sentences, seem not glad;
Such speciacles, though they are just, are sad.
Denham.

3. [In the plural.] Glasses to assist the sight.

The sixth age shifts
Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloons,
With speciacles on nose, and pouch on side. Shakf.
We have helps for sight above speciacles and glasses. Bacon.

Shakespeare was naturally learned; he needed not the speciacles of books to read nature; he looked upwards and found her there. Dryden.

The first speciacle-maker did not think that he was leading the way to the discovery of new places. Grew.

This is the reason of the decay of sight in old men, and shews why their sight is mended by speciacles. Newton.

This day then let us not be told,
That you are sick, and I grown old;
Nor think on our approaching ill,
And talk of speciacles and pills. Steele.

SPECTACLED. adj. [from the noun.] Furnished with spectacles.

All tongues speak of him, and the bleas'd sights
Are speciacle to see him. Shakespeare.

SPECTATION. n. f. [Speciatio, Latin.] Regard; respect.

This simple speciatio of the lungs is differenced from that which concomitates a pleurisy. Harvey.

SPECTATOR. n. f. [Speciateur, French;
speciator, Latin.] A looker-on; a beholder.

More
Than history can pattern, though devis'd
And play'd to take speciatures. Shakespeare.

It proves a good repast to the speciatures, the dish pays the shot. Shakespeare.

An old gentleman mounting on horseback, got up heavily, but desired the speciatures that they would count fourscore and eight before they judg'd him. Dryden.

He mourns his former vigour lost to far,
To make him now speciature of a war. Dryden.

What pleasure hath the owner more than the speciature? Scots.

SPECTATORSHIP. n. f. [from speciature.]
Act of beholding.

Thou stand'st i' th' state of hanging, or of some death more long in speciature, and cracher in suffering. Shakespeare.

SPECTRE. n. f. [Specire, French; spectrum,
Latin.]

1. Apparition; appearance of persons dead.

The ghosts of traitors from the bridge descend,
With bold fantastic spectres to rejoice. Dryden.

The very poetical use of the word, for a spectre doth imply an exact resemblance to some real being it represents. Stillingfleet.

There are nothing but spectres the understanding puts to itself, to flatter its own laziness. Locke.

2. Something made preternaturally visible.
SPECTRUM. n. f. [Latin.] An image; a visible form.

This prism had some rays running along within the glass, from the one end to the other, which scattered some of the sun's light irregularly, but had no sensible effect in increasing the length of the coloured spectrum. Newton.

SPECULAR. adj. [Specularis, Latin.]

1. Having the qualities of a mirror or looking-glass.

It were but madness now t' impart
The skill of specular stone. Donne.

Quicksilver may, by the fire alone, in glass vessels, be turned into a red body; and from this red body may be obtained a mercury, bright and specu-lar as before. Boyle.

A speculum of metal without glass, made some years since for optical uses, and very well wrought, produced none of those rings; and thence I understood that these rings arise not from the specular surface alone, but depend upon the two surfaces of the plate of glass whereof the speculum was made,
and upon the thickness of the glass between them.
Newton.

2. Assisting sight. Improper.

The hidden way
Of nature wouldst thou know, how first she frames
All things in miniature, thy specular orb
Apply to well-dissected kernels; to!
In each observe the slender threads
Of first-beginning trees. Philips.

To SPECULATE. v. n. [Speculer, French;
specular, Latin.] To meditate; to contemplate; to take a view of any thing with the mind.

Consider the quantity, and not speculate upon an intricate relation. Digby.

As news-writers record facts which afford great matter of speculation, their readers speculate accordingly, and, by their variety of conjectures, become confumate statesmen. Addison.

To SPECULATE. v. a. To consider attentively; to look through with the mind.

Man was not meant to gape, or look upward, but to have his thoughts sublime; and not only behold, but speculate their nature with the eye of the understanding. Brown.

SPECULATION. n. f. [speculation, French;
from speculate.]

1. Examination by the eye; view.

2. Examiner; spy. This word is found no where else, and probably is here mis-printed for speculator.

They who have, as who have not, whom their great stars

Throne and set high? servants
Which are to France the tips and speculations, Intelligent of our state. Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. Mental view; intellectual examination; contemplation.

In all these things being fully persuaded, that what they did, it was obedience to the will of God, and that all men should do the like; there remained, after speculation, practice whereunto the whole world might be framed. Hooker.

Thenceforth to speculations high or deep
I turn'd my thoughts; and with capacious mind
Consider'd all things visible. Milton.

News-writers afford matter of speculation.
Addison.

4. A train of thoughts formed by meditation.

From him Socrates derived the principles of morality, and most part of his natural speculations.
Temple.

5. Mental scheme not reduced to practice.

This terrestrial globe, which before was only round in speculation, has since been surrounded by the fortune and boldness of many navigators.
Temple.

This is a consideration not to be neglected, or thought an indifferent matter of mere speculation.
Leffey.

6. Power of sight. Not in use.

Thy bones are marrowless; thy blood is cold;
Thou hast no speculation in thine eyes
Thou hast a with. Shakespeare.

SPECULATIVE. adj. [Speculatif, French;
from speculate.]

1. Given to speculation; contemplative.

If all other uses were utterly taken away, yet the mind of man being by nature speculative, and delighted with contemplation in itself, they were to be known even for mere knowledge sake. Hooker.

It encourages speculative persons, who have no
turn of mind to increase their fortunes. Addison.

2. Theoretical; notional; ideal; not practical.

Some take it for a speculative platform, that reason and nature would that the best should govern, but nowise to create a right. Bacon.

These are not speculative flights, or imaginary notions, but are plain and undeniable laws, that are founded in the nature of rational beings. Law.

SPECULATIVELY. adv. [from speculative.]

1. Contemplatively; with meditation.

2. Ideally; notionally; theoretically; not practically.

SPECULATOR. n. f. [from speculate.]

1. One who forms theories.

He is destricts in puzzling others, if they be not through-paced speculators in those great theories.
Morre.

2. [speculateur, French.] An observer; a contemplator.

Although lapidaries and quarry enquirers affirm it, yet the writers of minerals, and natural speculators, conceive the stones which bear this name to be a mineral concretion. Brown.

3. A spy; a watcher.

All the boats had one speculator, to give notice
when the fish approached. Brown.

SPECULATORY. adj. [from speculate.] Exercising speculation.

SPECULUM. n. f. [Latin.] A mirror;
a looking-glass; that in which representations are formed by reflection.

A rough and coloured object may serve for a speculum, to reflect the artificial rainbow. Boyle.

SPEED. The pret. and part. pass. of speed.

His horse full of windgalls, speed with the spavins, and rayed with the yellows. Shakespeare.

Barbarossa, speed of that he desired, said not long at Constantinople, but speed his course towards Italy. Knolles.

With all his harness soon the god was speed;
His flying hat, his wings upon his heels. Dryden.

SPEECH. n. f. [from speak.]

1. The power of articulate utterance; the power of expressing thoughts by words, or vocal sounds.

There is none comparable to the variety of instructive expressions by speech, wherewith man alone is endowed, for the communication of his thoughts. Hobbes.

Though our ideas are first acquired by various sensations and reflections, yet we convey them to each other by the means of certain sounds, or written marks, which we call words; and a great part of our knowledge is both obtained and communicated by these means, which are called speech. Watts.

2. Language; words considered as expressing thoughts.

In speech be eight parts. Accidence.

The acts of God to human ears
Cannot without process of speech be told. Milton.

3. Particular language; as distinct from others.

There is neither speech nor language, but their voices are heard among them. Ps. Common Prayer.

4. Any thing spoken.

A plague upon your epileptic usages!
Smile you my speeches as I were a fool?
Shakespeare.

5. Talk; mention.

The duke did of me demand
What was the speech among the Londoners, Concerning the French journey. Shakespeare.

Speech of a man's self ought to be seldom. Boozer
 6. Oratorical; harangue.
 The constant design of these poems, in all their speeches, was to drive home one particular point. Swift

7. Declaration of thoughts.
 I with leave of speech, Shakespeare, replied. Milton
Speechless, etc. [from speech.]

8. Deprived of the power of speaking; made mute or dumb.
 He fell down, foam'd at mouth, and was speechless. Shakespeare

The great god Pan hath broken his pipes, and Apollo's priests are become speechless. Raleigh
 A single vision transports them: it finds them in the eagerness and height of their devotion; they are speechless for the time that it continues, and prostrate when it departs. Dryden
 Speechless with wonder, and half dead with fear. Shakespeare

2. Mute; dumb.

I kneel'd before him;
 'Twas very faintly he said rise: dismiss'd me
 Thus, with his speechless hand. Shakespeare
 From her eyes
 I did receive fair speechless messages. Shakespeare
 He that never hears a word spoken, it is no wonder he remains speechless; as any one must do, who from an infant should be bred up among mutes. Holwer

To SPEED. v. n. pret. and part. pass. speed and speeded. [speeden, Dutch.]

6. To make haste; to move with celerity.
 So well they speed, that they be come at length
 Unto the place where the Paynim lay Devoid of outward sense and native strength,
 Cover'd with charmed cloud from view of day. Fairy Queen

Do you think me a swallow, an arrow, or a bullet? Have I, in my poor and cold motion, the expedition of thought? I speeded hither with the very stretch of possibility. Shakespeare
 If pray'r's
 'ould alter high decrees, I to that place
 Would speed before thee, and be louder heard. Milton
 See where I dwell speed! a trusty soldier. A. Phillips

2. [Hebrew, to grow rich, Sax.] To have good success.

Timon is struck, indeed;
 And he, that's once struck, will hardly speed. Shakespeare

Now if this suit lay in Bianca's power,
 How quickly should you speed. Shakespeare
 When first this tempter took the gulf from hell,
 I told you then he should prevail, and speed
 In his bad errand. Milton

3. To succeed well or ill.

Make me not fight like the basilisk:
 I've look'd on thousands, who have sped the better
 By my regard, but kill'd none so. Shakespeare Macbeth shew'd them what an offence it was rashly to depart out of the city, which might be unto them dangerous, although they should speed never so well. Kneller

They were violators of the first temple; and those that profaned and abused the second, sped no better. South

4. To have any condition, good or bad.

Ships heretofore in seas like fishes sped,
 The nightfall still upon the smallest led. Waller
 To SPEED. v. a.

1. To dispatch in haste; to send away quickly.

The tyrant's self, a thing unus'd, began
 To feel his heart relent with meek compassion;
 But, not dispos'd to ruth or mercy then,
 He sped him thence home to his habitation. Fairfax

2. To hasten; to put into quick motion.

Hearing so much, will speed her foot again,
 Led hither by pure love. Shakespeare
 Saturn, tow'rd the coast of earth beneath,
 Down from the echinusk sped with hop'd success,
 Throws his steep sight in many an airy wheel. Milton

The great god Pan hath broken his pipes, and Apollo's priests are become speechless. Raleigh

3. To dispatch in haste; to send away quickly.

4. To dispatch; to destroy; to kill; to mischief; to ruin.
 With a speeding thrust his heart he found;
 The lukewarm blood came rushing thro' the wound. Dryden

A dire dilemma! either way I'm sped;
 If eyes they write, if friends they read, me dead. Pope

5. To excuse; to dispatch.
 Judicial acts are all those writings and matters which relate to judicial proceedings, and are sped in open court at the instance of one or both of the parties. Ayliffe

6. To assist; to help forward.

Reach'd her midwife hands to speed the throws. Dryden
 Propitious Neptune cheer'd their course by night
 With rising gales, that sped their happy flight. Dryden

Speed the soft intercourse from soul to soul,
 And wait a sigh from Iudus to the pole. Pope

7. To make prosperous; to make to succeed.

If any bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed. St. Paul

He was chosen, though he stood low upon the roll, by a very unusual concurrence of providential events, happened to be sped. Fell

SPEED. n. f. [speed, Dutch.]

1. Quickness; celerity.

Earth receives
 As tribute, such a sunless journey brought
 Of incorporeal speed, her warmth and light;
 Speed! to describe whole swiftness number fails. Milton

We observe the horse's patient service at the plough, his speed upon the highway, his docibleness, and desire of glory. More

2. Haste; hurry; dispatch.

When they strain to their utmost speed, there is still the wonted distance between them and their aims: all their eager pursuits bring them no acquiescence. Decay of Piety

3. The course or pace of a horse.
 He that rides at high speed, and with a pistol kills a sparrow flying. Shakespeare

4. Success; event of any action or incident.
 The prince your son, with mere conceit and fear
 Of the queen's speed, is gone. Shakespeare
 O Lord, I pray thee lend me good speed. Genesis

SPEEDILY. adv. [from speedy.] With haste; quickly.

Post speedily to your husband, Shakespeare
 Shew him this letter.
 Send speedily to Bertran; charge him strictly Not to proceed. Dryden

SPEEDINESS. n. f. [from speedy.] The quality of being speedy.

SPEEDWELL. n. f. [veronica, Latin.] A plant; fluellin.

In a scarcity in Silesia a rumour was spread of its raining millet seed; but it was found to be only the seeds of the ivy-leaved speedwell, or small henbit. Berham

SPEEDY. adj. [from speed.] Quick; nimble; quick of dispatch.

How near's the other army?
 —Near, and on speedy foot: the main defery Stands on the hourly thought. Shakespeare
 Back with speediest fall
 Zophiel, of cherubs the swiftest wing,
 Came flying. Milton

Let it be enough what thou hast done,
 When spotted death's ran atom'd through ev'ry street.
 With poison'd darts, which not the good could shun,
 The speedy could outfly, or valiant meet. Dryden

SPEIGHT. n. [spiculus martius, Latin.] A bird.

SPELL. n. [spell, Saxon, a word.]

A charm, consisting of some words of power. Thus Horace was told:
 Some verbs & voces quibus hunc laetum dolorem

Relieve.
 Start not; her actions shall be holy;
 You hear my spell is lawful: do not then fear,
 Until you see her die again; for then
 You kill her death. Shakespeare

Some have delivered the poetry of spirit, as they stand in awe of charms, spells, and conjurations, letters, characters, notes, and dithes. Brown

Thou dar'st not thus disparage glorious arms,
 Had not spells
 And black enchantments, some magician's art,
 Arm'd thee or charge'd thee strong. Milton

Begin, begin; the mystick spell prepare.
 Yourself you so excel,
 When you vouchsafe to breathe my thought,
 Thus like a spirit, with this spell
 Of my own teaching, I am caught. Waller

Then reach'd her midwife hands to speed the throw And spoke the powerful spells that babies to but disclose. Dryden

2. A turn of work; a vicissitude of labour
 A low word.
 Their toil is so extreme as they cannot endure above four hours in a day, but are succeeded by spells: the rusticus of the time they wear out coytes and kayles. Corn

To SPELL. v. a. pret. and part. pass. spell or spelt. [spellen, Dutch.]

1. To write with the proper letters.
 In the criticism of spelling, the word future ought to be with t, and not with y; and if this be then it is false spelled throughout. Dryden

2. To read by naming letters singly.
 I never yet saw man,
 How wise, how noble, young, how rarely fearful
 But she would spell him backward; if fair he'd She'd swear the gentleman should be her sister. Shakespeare

3. To charm.
 I have you fast:
 Unchain your spirits now with spelling charms,
 And try if they can gain your liberty. Shakespeare

This, gathered in the planetary hour,
 With noxious weeds, and spell'd with words of power
 Dire stepdames in the magic bowl infuse. Dryden

To SPELL. v. n.

1. To form words of letters.
 What small knowledge was, in them did dwell,
 And he a god, who could but read or spell. Dryden

By passing on the vowels and consonants on the sides of four dice, he has made this a play for children, whereby his eldest son in coats he played himself into spelling. Lect

The Latin being written of the same character with the mother tongue, by the assistance of a spelling book it is legible. Spe

Another cause, which hath maimed our language is a foolish opinion that we ought to spell exactly as we speak. Swift

2. To read.
 If I read aught in heaven,
 Or heav'n wrote aught of fate, by what the stars
 Voluminous or single characters,
 In their conjunction met, give me to spell,
 Sorrows and labours, opposition, hate,
 Attend thee. Milton

When gowns, not arms, repell'd
 The fierce Egipt, and the African bold,
 Whether to fustigate, or to unfold
 The drift of hollow states, hard to be spell'd. Milton

And may at last my weary age
 Find out the peaceful hermitage,
 Where I may sit and rightly spell
 Of every star that heaven's doth spell,
 And every herb that sponges dew. Milton

3. To read unskilfully.
 As to his understanding, they bring him in roll of all nations; a red-unwritten blank, that none can read.

SPHACELUS. n. f. [sphacelus, Fr.] A gangrene; a mortification. It is the ground of inflammation, gangrene, &c. Wise.

SPHERE. n. f. [sphere, Fr. sphera, Lat.] 1. A globe; an orbicular body; a body of which the centre is at the same distance from every point of the circumference. First the sun, a mighty sphere, he fraught.

2. Any globe of the mundane system. What is within the moon's fair shining sphere, What is in every other star unseen, Of other worlds he happily should hear? Fairy Qu. And then mortal ears Had heard the music of the spheres. Dryden.

3. A globe representing the earth or sky. Two figures on the sides embos'd appear; Canon, and what's his name who made the sphere, And shew'd the seasons of the rising year? Dryden.

He tramples down the spikes, and intercepts the year. Dryden

The gleaners,
Spile after spike, their sparing harvest pick. Thomson

2. A long nail of iron or wood; a long rod of iron sharpened: so called from its similitude to an ear of corn.

For the body of the ships, no nation equals England for the oakum timber; and we need not borrow of any other iron for spikes, or nails to fasten them. Bacon

The head of your spike would be seen to more advantage, if it were placed on a spike of the tower. Dryden

He wears on his head the corona radiata, another type of his divinity: the spikes that shoot out represent the rays of the sun. Addison

SPIKE. n. f. A smaller species of lavender.

Persons distinguished by qualities of the mind. A French word, happily growing obsolete.

Romish varieties, from the rising up of some obscure spirits among us, conclude that the body of our church is schismatical, because the branches or members thereof were such.

On pitying God did well form'd spirits raise,
For the toilful business of their days,
Before the glorious nation, and to give
New life, and then the rules in peace to live.

Such spirits as he desired to please, such would conquer his judges.

3. That which gives vigour or cheerfulness to the mind; the purest part of the body, bordering, says Sydenham, on immateriality. In this meaning it is commonly written with the plural termination.

Though thou didst but jest,
Alas my weak spirits I cannot take a truce,
But they will wake.

When I sit and tell
The warlike feats I've done, his spirits fly out of my story.

And when all our lamps are burnt,
The body wasted, and our spirits spent,

When we have all the learned volumes turn'd,
Which old men's wits both help and ornament,
What can we know, or what can we discern?

It was the time when gentle might began
To couch with sleep the busy spirits of man.

Toing thy penite, would heav'n my breath prolong.

It is worthy such a song,
As Orpheus should transcend my lays.

All men by experience find the necessity and use of the business of conversation.

By means of the curious modulation of the sensitive nerves, the organs of the spirits should be moved.

Let me see body thus the secret soul
To spirits in the business of connection.

Each motion guards, and every nerve sustains,
Each water, but in the effects remains.

He is always forced to drink a hearty glass, to keep his spirits out of his head, and keep his spirits slowly enough for sleep.

4. Characteristical likeness; essential qualities.

Room pieces will appear best in a room where the windows are high, because they are commonly made to a descending light, which of all other death set off men's faces in the most spirit.

16. Any thing eminently pure and refined.

Nor doth the spirit itself,
That most pure spirit of sense, behold itself.

17. That which hath power or energy.

There is in wits a mighty spirit, that will not be congealed.

18. An inflammable liquor raised by distillation: as brandy, rum.

What the chymists call spirit, they apply the name to so many different things, that they seem to have no settled notion of the thing. In general, they give the name of spirit to any distilled volatile liquor.

All spirits, by frequent use, destroy, and at last extinguish the natural heat of the stomach.

In distillations, what trickles down the sides of the receiver, if it will not mix with water, is oil;
if it will, it is spirit.

19. It may be observed, that in the poets spirit was a monosyllable, and therefore was often written sprite, or, less properly, spwright.

The charge thereof unto a courteous spight Commanded was.

To SPIRIT, v. a.

1. To animate or actuate as a spirit.

So talk'd the spirit'd fly snake

2. To excite; to animate; to encourage;
to invigorate to action.

spreading the ambition of private men.

Many officers and private men spirit up and assist those obstinate people to continue in their rebellion.

3. To draw; to entice.

In the southern coast of America, the southern point of the needle vaneth toward the land, as being disposed and spirit'd that way by the immortal and proper hemisphere.

The ministry had him spirit'd away, and cried abroad as a dangerous person.

They, notwithstanding the great thickness and spiritousness of the liquor, did lift up the upper surface, and for a moment form a thin film like a small hemisphere.

SPIRITUAL, adj. [from spiritual, French; from spirit.]

1. Distinct from matter; immaterial; incorporeal.

Echo is a great argument of the spiritual essence of sounds; for if it were corporeal, the repercussion should be created by like instruments with the original sound.

Both visible and audible in their working, and no corporeal substance into their medium, but only carry certain spiritual species.

All creatures, as well spiritual as corporeal, declare their absolute dependence upon the first Author of all beings, the only self-existent God.

2. Mental; intellectual.

Spiritual armour, able to resist
Satan's assaults.

The same distiller has invented his spiritual the passions rebel, and there are so many governments, that there can be no government.

Upon my spiritual conversation.

As touching France, to give a greater sum than ever at one time the clergy did.

Those servants, who have believing masters, are forbid to withdraw any thing of their worldly respect, as presuming upon their spiritual kindness; or to honour them less, because they are become their brethren in being believers.

The clergy's business lies among the laity; nor is there a more effectual way to forward the salvation of men's souls, than for spiritual persons to unite themselves as agreeable as they can in the conversations of the world.

She loves them as her spiritual children, and they reverence her as their spiritual mother, with an affection far above that of the fondest friends.

SPIRITUALITY, n. f. [from spiritual.]

1. Incorporeity; immateriality; essence distinct from matter.

It is light be not spiritual, yet it approacheth nearest unto spirituality, and it is the most incorporality, then of all others the most subtle and pure.

2. Intellectual nature.

A pleasure made for the soul, suitable to its spirituality, and equal to all its capacities.

3. [from spiritual, French.] Acts independent of the body; pure acts of the soul;
mental refinement.

Many teach multiplications and applications to duty will fix upon the soul, and it will give him a time and close application of mind to recover it to such a frame, as shall dispose it for the spirituality of religion.

4. That which belongs to any one's mind ecclesiastical.

Of common right, the dean and chapter are guardians of the spiritualities, during the vacancy of a bishopric.

SPLNETIVE. adj. [from splen.] Hot; fiery; passionate. Not in use.

Take thy fingers from my throat;
For though I am not splnetive and rash,
Yet I have in me something dangerous. Shaksp.

SPLNET. n. f. [for perhaps splint; splintella, Italian.]

Splnet is a callous hard substance, or an insensible swelling, which breeds on or adheres to the flanks of a horse, and, when it grows big, spoils the shape of the leg. When there is but one, it is called a single splnet, but when there is another opposite to it, on the outside of the flank-bone, it is called a paired or paired splnet. Lawson's Dict.

TO SPLIC. v. a. [splissen, Dutch; phico, Latin.] To join the two ends of a rope without a knot.

SPLINT. n. f. [splinter, Dutch.]

1. A fragment of wood in general.

2. A thin piece of wood, or other matter, used by chirurgeons to hold the bone newly set in its place.

The ancients, after the seventh day, used splints, which not only kept the members steady, but brought; and of these some are made of two others of flint-bone and wood, bound up in linen cloths. Bojan.

TO SPLIC. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To secure by splints.

This broken joint must be set to splint, and the crack of your love shall grow stronger than it was before. Shaksp.

2. To shiver; to break into fragments.
SPLINTER. n. f. [splinter, Dutch.]
 1. A fragment of any thing broken with violence.
 He was slain upon a course at tilt, one of the splinters of Montgomery's staff going in at his beaver. Bacon.
 Amidst whole heaps of spices lights a ball,
 And now their odours arm'd against them fly;
 Some preciously by shattered porcelain fall,
 And some by aromatic splinters die. Dryden.
 2. A thin piece of wood.
 A plain Indian fan, used by the meaner sort, made of the small stringy parts of roots, spread out in a round flat form, and so bound together with a splinter hoop, and strengthened with small bars on both sides. Grew.
To SPLINTER. v. n. [from the noun.]
 To be broken into fragments; to be shattered.
To SPLIT. v. a. pret. and part. pass. splitted. [splitten, Dutch.]
 1. To cleave; to rive; to divide longitudinally in two.
 Do't, and thou hast the one half of my heart;
 Do't not, thou split'st thine own. Shakspeare.
 That felt hand
 Hath, with the courage which the heart did lend it, splitted the heart. Shakspeare Wert thou serv'd up two in one dish, the rather
 To split thy five into a double father? Cleaveland Cold winter split the rocks in twain. Dryden
 A skull so hard, that it is almost as easy to split a helmet of iron as to make a fracture in it. Ray.
 This effort is in some earthquakes so vehement, that it splits and tears the earth, making cracks or chasms in it some miles. Woodward.
 2. To divide; to part.
 Their logick has appeared the mere art of wrangling, and their metaphysics the skill of splitting an hair, of distinguishing without a difference. Watts.
 One and the same ray is by refraction disturbed, shattered, dilated, and split, and spread into many diverging rays. Newton.
 He illustrates Luther's sensuality and disobedience, two crimes which he has dealt with; and, to make the more solemn shew, he splits 'em into twenty. Atterbury.
 Oh! would it please the gods to split thy beauty, size, and years, and wit,
 No age could furnish out a pair
 Of nymphs so graceful, wise, and fair;
 With half the lustre of your eyes,
 With half your wit, your years, and size. Swift.
 3. To dash and break on a rock.
 God's destruction, as a full and violent wind, drives him in an instant, not to the harbour, but on the rock where he will be irrecoverably split.
 Those who live by shores with joy behold
 Some wealthy vessel split on shanda d migh;
 And from the rocks leap down for shipwreck'd gold,
 And seek the tempests which the others fly. Dryden.
 4. To divide; to break into discord.
 In flutes notoriously irreligious, a secret and irresistible power splits their countels, and limits their most refined policies with frustration and a curse. South.
To SPLIT. v. n.
 1. To burst in sunder; to crack; to suffer disruption.
 A huge vessel of exceeding hard marble split asunder by congealed water. Boyle.
 What is't to me,
 Who never sail on but unfaithful sea,
 If storms arise and clouds grow black,
 If the main split, and threaten wreck? Dryden.
 The road that to the kings this store transmits,
 Into unnumber'd narrow channels splits. Blackmore.
 2. To burst with laughter.
 Each had a gravity would make you split,
 And took his head at M—y as a wit. Pope.

S P O

3. To be broken in pieces; to crack.
 When you, and your number find with you,
 Hung on our party's post. Shakspeare.
 These are the rocks on which the language tribe of lovers daily split, and on which the politician, the sly misf, and projector are cast away. Specta.
 The journey sped a rock, and the wind was so strong that we were driven directly upon it, and immediately split. Swift.
SPLITTER. n. f. [from split.] One who splits.
 How should we rejoice, if, like Judas the first,
 Those splitters of parsons in sunder should burst! Swift.
SPLITTER. n. f. Bustle; tumult. A low word.
To SPOIL. v. a. [spolio, Lat. spolier, French.]
 1. To seize by robbery; to take away by force.
 Yet took joyfully the spoiling of your goods,
 Knowing in yourselves that ye have in heaven an enduring substance. Hebrews.
 This mount,
 With all his verdure spoil'd, and trees adrift. Milton.
 2. To plunder; to strip of goods: with of before the thing taken.
 Yielding themselves upon the Turks faith, for the safeguard of their liberty and goods, they were most ingenuously spoiled of all that they had. Knolles.
 Thou shalt not gain what I deny to yield,
 Nor reap the harvest, though the spoil'st the field. Prun.
 My sons their old unhappy lot despise,
 Spoil'd of his kingdom, and depriv'd of eyes. Pope.
 3. To corrupt; to mar; to make useless.
 [This is properly spoli: spolium, Sax.]
 Beware lest any man spoil you, through philosophy and vain deceit.
 Spiritual pride spoils many graces. Taylor.
 Women are not only spoiled by this education, but we spoil that part of the world which would otherwise furnish most instances of innocent and exalted piety. Law.
To SPOIL. v. n.
 1. To practise robbery or plunder.
 England was infected with robbers and butlaws, which, lurking in woods, used to break forth to rob and spoil.
 They which hate us, spoil for themselves. Psalms.
 2. To grow useless; to be corrupted.
 He that gathered a hundred bushels of ears, or apples, had thereby a property in them: he was only to look that he used them before they spoil'd, else he robbed others. Locke.
SPOIL. n. f. [spolium, Lat.]
 1. That which is taken by violence; that which is taken from an enemy; plunder; pillage; booty.
 The cry of Falbot serves me for a sword;
 For I have laden me with many spoils.
 I sing no other weapon but his name. Shakspeare.
 2. That which is gained by strength or effort.
 But grant our hero's hopes long toil
 And comprehensive genius crown,
 Each science and each art his spoil,
 Yet what reward, or what renown? Bentley.
 3. That which is taken from another.
 Gentle gales,
 Fanning their odoriferous wings, dispense Native perfumes, and whisper whence they stole
 These balmy spoils. Milton.
 4. The act of robbery; robbery; waste.
 The man that hath not music in himself,
 Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,
 Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils. Shakspeare.
 Too late, alas! we find
 The softness of thy sword, continued through thy foil,
 To be the only cause of unrecover'd spoil. Drayton.

S P O

- Go and speed!
 Havock, and spoil, and ruin are my gain. Malm.
 5. Corruption; cause of corruption.
 Company, villainous company, hath been the spoil of me. Shakspeare.
 6. The slough; the cast off skin of a serpent.
 Snakes, the rather for the casting of their spoil, live till they be old. Bacon.
SPOILER. n. f. [from spoil.]
 1. A robber; a plunderer; a pillager.
 Such ruin of her manners Rome
 Dath suffer now, as she's become Both her own spoiler and own prey. Beaumont.
 Providence, where it loves a nation, concern'self to own and assert the interest of religion, by blasing the spoilers of religious persons and places. Neale.
 Come you then here, thus far, thro' waves, to conquer,
 To waste, to plunder, out of mere compassion?
 Is it humanity that prompts you on?
 Happy for us, and happy for you spoilers,
 Had your humanity ne'er reach'd our world! A. Pope.
 2. One who mars or corrupts any thing.
SPOILFUL. adj. [spoil and ful.] Wasteful; rapacious.
 Having oft in battle vanquished
 Thro' spoilful victs, and swarming Federates, Long time in peace his realm established. T. Quin.
SPOKE. n. f. [spacen, Sax. speiche, German.] The bar of a wheel that passes from the nave to the felly.
 All you gods,
 In general synod take away her power;
 Break all the spokes and felines of her wheel,
 And bow the round nave down the hill of heav'n. Shakspeare.
 No heir e'er drove so fine a coach,
 The spokes, we are by Ovid told,
 Were silver, and the axle gold. South.
SPOKE. The preterit of speake.
 They spoke best in the glory of their conquest.
SPOKEN. The participle passive of speake.
 Would'st thou be spoken for to the king? Chapman.
 The original of these signs for commendation found in vera voce, in spoken language. H.
SPOKESMAN. n. f. [spoke and man.] One who speaks for another.
 'Tis you that have the reason,
 To do what?
 —To be a spokesman from madam Silvia. Shakspeare.
 He shall be thy spokesman unto the pope. Chapman.
To SPOLIATE. v. a. [spolio, Lat.] To rob; to plunder.
SPOLIATION. n. f. [spoliation, Fr. spoliation, Lat.] The act of robbery or pillage.
 An ecclesiastical benefice is sometimes void jure & facto, and sometimes de facto, and not jure; as when a man suffers a spoliation by his act.
SPO'NDIL. n. f. [spondil, Fr. spandil, Lat.] A foot of two long syllables.
 We see in the choice of the words the words of the sense and the striving to leave a space in the line: Homer clogs the verse with spandil and leaves the vowels open. B.
SPO'NDYL. n. f. [σπονδυλος, spondylus, Fr. spondylus, Lat.] A vertebra; a joint of the spine.
 It bath for the spine or back-bone a cartilage substance, without any spondil process, or tubercles.
SPONGE. n. f. [spongia, Lat.] A spongy porous substance, supposed by some to be the nidus of animals. It is remarkable for making up water. It is too often written sponges. See SPONGE.

Sponges are gathered from the sides of rocks, being as a large but tough moss. Bacon.
They opened and washed part of their sponges.
Saudys.

Great officers are like sponges: they suck till they are full, and, when they come once to be squeezed, their very heart's blood comes away.
L'Estrange

To SPONGE. - v. a. [from the noun.] To blot; to wipe away as with a sponge.

Except between the words of translation and the mind of scripture itself there be contradiction, very little difference should not seem an intolerable blemish necessarily to be sponged out. Hooker.

To SPONGE. - v. n. To suck in as a sponge;
to gain by mean arts.

The ant lives upon her own, honestly gotten;
whereas the fly is an intruder, and a common fool-leech, that sponges upon other people's treasures. L'Estrange.

Here went the dean, when he's to seek,
To sponge a breakfast once a week. Swift.

SPONGER. n. f. [from sponge.] One who hangs for a maintenance on others.

A generous rich man, that kept a splendid and open table, would try which were friends, and which only trencher-fires and spongers. L'Estrange.

SPONGINESS. n. f. [from spongy.] Softness, and fulness of cavities, like a sponge.

The lungs are exposed to receive all the droppings from the brain: a very fit cistern, because of their sponginess. Harvey.

SPONGIOUS. adj. [spongiosus, Fr. from sponge.] Full of small cavities like a sponge.

All thick bones are hollow or spongious, and contain an oblongous substance in little vessels, which by the heat of the body is exhaled through these bones to supply their fibres. Cheyne.

SPONGY. adj. [from sponge.]

1. Soft and full of small interstitial holes.
The lungs are the most spongy part of the body,
and therefore able to contract and dilate itself.
Bacon.

A spongy excrecence groweth upon the roots of the laurel-tree, and upon cedar, very white, light, and friable, called agarick. Bacon.

The body of the tree being very spongy within, though hard without, they easily contrive into cannels. More.

Into earth's spongy veins the ocean sucks,
Those rivers to replenish which he drinks.
Denham.

Return, unhappy swain!
The spongy clouds are fill'd with gathering rain.
Dryden.

Her bones are all very spongy, and more remarkably those of a wild bird, which flies much, and long together. Grewe.

2. Wet; drenched; soaked; full like a sponge.

When their drench'd natures lie as in a death,
What cannot you and I perform upon
Th' unguarded Duncan? What not put upon
His spongy officers, who shall bear the guilt?
Shakespeare.

SPONK. n. f. [a word in Edinburgh which denotes a match, or any thing dipt in sulphur that takes fire: as, any sponks will ye buy?] Touchwood.

to marriage.

SPONSION. n. f. [sponsio, Lat.] The act of becoming surety for another.

SPONSOR. n. f. [Lat.] A surety; one who makes a promise or gives security for another.

In the baptism of a male there ought to be two males and one woman, and in the baptism of a female child two women and one man; and these are
Vol. II.

called sponsors or godfathers; and the education in the true christian faith.

The sponsor ought to be of the same nation with the person to whom he becomes surety. Broome.
The rash hermit, who with impious prayer
Had been the sponsor of another's care. Harte.

SPONTANEITY. n. f. [spontaneitas, school
Lat. spontaneitas, Fr. from spontaneous.]
Voluntariness; willingness; accord un-compelled.

Necessity and spontaneity may sometimes meet together, so may spontaneity and liberty; but real necessity and true liberty can never. Bramhall.

Strict necessity they simple call;
It binds the will, that things foreknown
By spontaneity, not choice, are done. Dryden.

SPONTANEOUS. adj. [spontaneus, Fr. from sponte, Lat.] Voluntary; not compelled; acting without compulsion or restraint; acting of itself; acting of its own accord.

Many unadvised motions in animals, though I cannot call them voluntary, yet I see them spontaneous. I have reason to conclude, that these are not simply mechanical. Hute.

They now came forth
Spontaneous; for within their spirit mov'd Attendant on their lord. Milton.

While John for me-pius does declare,
And Roger loves to pitch the bar,
Both legs and arms spontaneous move,
Which was the thing I meant to prove. Prior.

Began with tenets, of every art the foul,
Parts answering parts shall slide into a whole;
Spontaneous beauties all around advance,
Start ev'n from difficulty, strike from chance;
Nature shall join you, time shall make it grow. Pope.

SPONTANEOUSLY. adv. [from spontaneous.]
Voluntarily; of its own accord.

This would be as impossible as that the lead of an edifice should naturally and spontaneously mount up to the roof, while lighter materials employ themselves beneath it. Bentley.

Why turn spontaneously acid, and the curd into cheese as hard as a stone. Arbuthnot.

SPONTANEOUSNESS. n. f. [from spontaneous.] Voluntariness; freedom of will;
accord unforced.

The sagacities and instincts of brutes, the sponta-neousness of many of their animal motions, are not explicable, without supposing some active determinate power connected to and inherent in their spirits, of a higher extraction than the bare natural modification of matter. Hute.

SPOOL. n. f. [puhl, German; spohl, Dutch.] A small piece of cane or reed, with a knot at each end; or a piece of wood turned in that form to wind yarn upon; a quill.

To SPOOM. v. n. [probably from spume, or foam, as a ship driven with violence
spumes, or raises a foam.] To go on swiftly. A sea term.

When virtue spooms before a prosperous gale,
My heaving wishes help to fill the sail. Dryden.

SPOON. n. f. [spoon, Dutch; spone, Danish; spounn, Islandick.] A concave vessel with a handle, used in eating liquids.

Wouldst thou drown thyself,
Put but a little water in a spoon,
And it shall be as all the ocean,
Enough to stifle such a villain up. Shakespeare.

This is a devil, and no monster: I will leave him; I have no long spoon.
Or o'er cold coffee trifle with the spoon,
Count the slow clock, and dine exact at noon. Pope.

To SPOON. v. n. In sea language, is when a ship, being under sail in a storm, cannot bear it, but is obliged to put rig before the wind. Bailey.

SPOONBILL. n. f. [spoon and bill; spatula, Lat.] A bird.

The shoveller, or spoonbill; the former name the more proper, the end of the bill being broad like a shovel, but not concave like a spoon, but perfectly flat. Grew.

Ducks and geese have such long broad bills to quaffer in water and mud, to which we may recon the bill of the spoonbill. Derham.

SPOONFUL. n. f. [spoon and full.]

1. As much as is generally taken at once in a spoon. A medical spoonful is half an ounce.

Prefer the him, before he do use the receipt, that he take such a pill, or a spoonful of liquor. Bacon.

2. Any small quantity of liquid.

Surely the choice and measure of the materials of which the whole body is composed, and what we take daily by pounds, is at least of as much importance as of what we take seldom, and only by grains and spoonfuls. Arbuthnot.

SPOONMEAT. n. f. [spoon and meat.]

Liquid food; nourishment taken with a spoon.

We prescribed a slender diet, allowing only spoonmeats. Weyman.

Wretched
Are mortals born to sleep their lives away!
Go back to what thy infancy began,
Eat pap and spoonmeat; for thy gurgles cry. Dryden.

Be fullen, and retake the lullaby,
Diet most upon spoonmeats, as veal or cock broth. Harvey.

SPOONWORM. n. f. Scurvygrass.

Spoonworm was there, to robur to supply;
And certainly, to clear the jaundic'd eye. Harte.

SPOONDICAL. adj. [spoon-dic; sporadic, French.]

A spoon-dic disease is an endemial disease, what in a particular season affects but few people.
Arbuthnot.

SPORT. n. f. [spott, a make-game, Islandick.]

1. Play; diversion; game; frolick and tumultuous merriment.

Her sports were such as carried riches of knowledge upon the stream of delight. Sidney.
As flow to wanton boys, are we to the gods;
They fill us for their sport. Shakespeare.

When their hearts were merry, they said, I call for Samsen, that he may make us sport; and they called for him, and he made them sport. Judge.

As a mad-man who casteth firebrands, arrows,
and death, so is the man that deceiveth his neighbour, and hath, and not in sport? Prov. 26.

The discourse of fools is tickle, and their sport is in the wantonness of sin. Ecclesiasticus.

2. Mock; contemptuous mirth.

It I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me, then let me be your jest. Shakespeare.

They had his messengers in derision, and made a sport of his prophets. 1 Peter.

To make sport with his word, and to endeavour to render it ridiculous, by turning that holy book into a gallery, is a direct affront to God. Tillotson.

3. That with which one plays.

Each on his rock transfixed, the sport and prey
Of wrecking whirlwinds. Milton.

Commit not thy prophetic mind
To sitting leaves, the sport of every wind.
Let thy disperse in air. Dryden.

Some give their wreaths on marble; he, more just,

Stoop'd down serene, and wrote them on the dust,
Trod under foot, the sport of every wind,
Sweet from the earth, and blotted from his mind;
There secret in the grave he bade them lie,
And griev'd they could not 'scape th' Almighty's eye. Dr. Madden on Dr. Beutler.

4. Play; idle gingle.

An author who should introduce such a sport of words upon our stage, would meet with small applause. Browne.

5. Diversion of the field, as of fowling, hunting, fishing.

*Now for our mountain sport, up to yon hill,
Your legs are young.* Shakespeare.
The king, who was excessively affected to hunting, and the sports of the field, had a great desire to make a great park, for red as well as fallow deer, between Richmond and Hampton Court. Clarendon.

TO SPORT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To divert; to make merry. It is used only with the reciprocal pronoun.

The poor man wept and bled, cried and prayed, while they sported themselves in his pain, and delighted in his prayers, as the argument of their victory. Sidney.

Away with him, and let her sport herself with that she's big with. Shakespeare.

Against whom do ye sport yourselves? against whom make ye a wide mouth, and draw out the tongue? Isaiah.

What pretty stories these are for a man of his seriousness to sport himself withal! Atturbury.

Let such writers go on at their dearest peril, and sport themselves in their own deceivings. Watts.

2. To represent by any kind of play.

Now sporting on thy lyre the love of youth,
Now virtuous age and venerable truth;
Expressing justly Sappho's wanton art
Of odes, and Pindar's more majestic part. Dryden.

TO SPORT. v. n.

1. To play; to frolic; to game; to wanton.

They, sporting with quick glance,
Shew to the sun their wav'd coats dropt with gold. Milton.

Larissa, as she sported at this play, was drowned in the river Peneus. Broome.

2. To trifle.

If any man turn religion into raillery, by hold jests, he renders himself ridiculous, because he sports with his own life. Tillotson.

SPORTFUL. adj. [sport and full.]

1. Merry; frolic; wanton; acting in jest.

How with a sportful malice it was follow'd,
May rather pluck on laughter than revenge. Shakespeare.

Down he alights among the sportful herd
Of those four-footed kinds. Milton.

2. Ludicrous; done in jest.

His highness, even in such a slight and sportful damage, had a noble sense of just dealing. Watson.
Behold your own Alcibiades, while he said,
He drew his glittering helmet from his head,
In which the youth to sportful arms he led. Dryden.

They are no sportful productions of the soil, but did once belong to real and living fishes; seeing each of them doth exactly resemble some other shell on the sea-shore. Bentley.

A catalogue of this may be had in Albericus Gentilis; which, because it is too sportful, I forbear to mention. Baker.

SPORTFULLY. adv. [from sportful.] Wantonly; merrily.

SPORTFULNESS. n. f. [from sportful.]

Wantonnefs; play; merriment; frolick.

The otter got out of the river, and inwaded himself so, as the ladies lost the further marking of his sportfulness. Sidney.

SPORTIVE. adj. [from sport.] Gay; merry; frolick; wanton; playful; ludicrous.

I am not in a sportive humour now;
Tell me, and dally not, where is the money? Shakespeare.

Is it I
That drive thee from the sportive court, where thou
Wast shot at with fair eyes, to be the mark
Of snaky muskets? Shakespeare.

While thus the constant pair alternate snail Joyful above them and around them play'd

11

Angels and sportive loves, a numerous crowd,
Swarming they clapt their wings, and low they bow'd. Prior.

We must not hope wholly to change their original tempers; nor make the gay peevish and grave, nor the melancholy sportive, without spoiling them. Locke.

No wonder savages or subjects slain,
Were equal crimes in a despotick reign;
Both doom'd alike for sportive tyrants bled,
But subjects star'd while savages were fed. Pope.

SPORTIVENESS. n. f. [from sportive.]

Gayety; play; wantonnefs.

Shall I conclude her to be simple, that has her time to begin, or refuse sportiveness as freely as I have? Watson.

SPORTSMAN. n. f. [sport and man.] One who pursues the recreations of the field.

Mamilius lets us know the pagan hunters had Melenger for their patron, as the christians have their St. Hubert: he speaks of the constellation which makes a good sportsman. Addison.

SPORTULE. n. f. [sportule, Fr. sportula,

Lat.] An alms; a dole.

The bishops, who consecrated the ground, had a full or sportule from the credulous laity. Ayliffe.

SPOT. n. f. [spotte, Danth; spotte, Flemish.]

1. A blot; a mark made by discoloration.

This three years day, these eyes, though clear
To outward view of blemish or of spot,
Bereft of sight, their seeing have forgot. Milton.

A long series of ancestors shews the native lustre with advantage, but if he any way degenerate from his line, the least spot is visible on ermine. Dryden.

2. A taint; a disgrace; a reproach; a fault.

Yet Chloe sure was form'd without a spot;
'Tis true, but something in her was forgot. Pope.

3. I know not well the meaning of spot in this place, unless it be a scandalous woman, a disgrace to her sex.
Let him take thee,
And hoist thee up to th' shouting plebeians;
Follow his chariot, like the greatest spot
Of all thy sex. Shakespeare.

4. A small extent of place.

That spot to which I point is paradise,
Adam's abode; those lusty shades, his bow'r. Milton.

He who, with Plato, shall place beatitude in the knowledge of God, will have his thoughts raised to other contemplations than those who looked not beyond this spot of earth, and those perishing things in it. Locke.

About one of these breathing passages is a spot of myrtles, that flourish within the steam of these vapours. Addison.

Abdallah converted the whole mountain into a kind of garden, and covered every part of it with plantations or spots of flowers. Guardian.

He that could make two ears of corn grow upon a spot of ground where only one grew before, would deserve better of mankind than the whole race of politicians. Swift.

5. Any particular place.

I would be busy in the world, and learn;
Not, like a coarse and useless dandel weed,
Fix'd to one spot, and rot just as I grow. Ottaway.

As in this grove I took my last farewell,
As on this very spot of earth I fell,
So the my prey becomes ev'n here. Dryden.

Here Adrian fell: upon that fatal spot
Our brother died. Granville.

The Dutch landscapes are, I think, always a representation of an individual spot, and each in its kind a very faithful, but very confined, portrait. Reynolds.

6. Upon the Spot. Immediately; without changing place. [Sur le champ.]

The lion did not chop him up immediately upon the spot; and yet he was relieved he should not escape. L'Estrange.

It was determined upon the spot, according to the oratory on either side prevailed.
TO SPOT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To mark with discolorations; to maculate.

They are polluted off'rings, more abhor'd
Than spotted livers in the sacrifice. Shakespeare.

Have you not seen a handkerchief,
Spotted with strawberries, in your wife's hand? Shakespeare.

But serpents now more amity maintain;
From spotted skins the leopard does refrain,
No weaker lion's by a stronger skin. Tate.

2. To patch by way of ornament.

I counted the patches on both sides, and found the tory patches to be about twenty stronger than the whig; but next morning the whole poppet-show was filled with faces spotted after the whigish manner. Spectator.

3. To corrupt; to disgrace; to taint.

This vow receive, this vow of God maintain,
My virgin life no spotted thoughts shall stain. Sidney.

The people of Armenia have retained the christian faith from the time of the apostles, but at this day it is spotted with many absurdities. Abbott.

SPOTLESS. adj. [from spot.]

1. Free from spots.

2. Free from reproach or impurity; immaculate; pure; untainted.

So much fairer
And spotless shall mine innocence arise,
When the king knows my truth. Shakespeare.

I date my life lay down, that the queen is spotless in th' eyes of Heaven. Shakespeare.

You grac'd the several parts of life,
A spotless virgin, and a faultless wife. Waller.

We sometimes wish that it had been our lot to live and converse with Christ, to hear his divine discourses, and to observe his spotless behaviour; and we please ourselves perhaps with thinking, how ready a reception we should have given to him and his doctrine. Atterbury.

Eternal sunshine of the spotless mind,
Each pray'r accepted, and each wish resign'd. Pope.

SPOTTER. n. f. [from spot.] One that spots; one that maculates.

SPOTTY. adj. [from spot.] Full of spots; maculated.

The moon, whose orb
Through optick glass the Turk an artful views
In Valambrosa to defery new lands, Rivers, or mountains, on her spotted globe. Milton.

SPOUSAL. adj. [from spouse.] Nuptial; matrimonial; conjugal; connubial; bridal.

There shall we consummate our spousal rites. Shakespeare.

Hope's chaste kiss wrongs no more joy's mind-head,
Than spousal rites prejudice the marriage bed. Crahaue.

This other, in her prime of love,
Spousal embraces vintated with gold. Milton.

Sleep'st thou, carelefs of the nuptial day?
Thy spousal ornament neglected lies;
Arise, prepare the bridal train, arise. Pope.

SPOUSAL. n. f. [epousailles, Fr. sponsalia Lat.] Marriage; nuptials.

As man and wife, being two, are one in love,
So be there 'twixt your kingdoms such a spousal,
That never may ill office, or fell jealousy,
Thrust in between the paction of these kingdoms,
To make divorce of them incorporate league. Shakespeare.

The amorous bird of night
Sung spousal, and bid haste the evening star,
On his hill top to light the bridal lamp. Milton.

The spousals of Hippolyta the queen
What tilts and tournaments at the feast were seen! Dryden.

Ethereal music did her death prepare,
Like joyful sounds of spousals in the air;
A radiant light did her crown'd temples gild. Dryden.

SPOUSE, n. f. [sponsus, sponsa, Latin; sponse, French.] One joined in marriage; a husband or wife.

She is of good esteem;
Beside, so qualified as may beset
The sponse of any noble gentleman. Shakespeare.
At once, farewell, O faithful sponse they said;
At once th' encroaching rinds their closing lips invade. Dryden.

SPOUSED, adj. [from the noun.] Wedded; espoused; joined together as in matrimony.

They led the vine
To wed her elm; she spos'd about him twines Marryable arms. Milton.

SPOUSELESS, adj. [from sponse.] Wanting a husband or wife.

To tempt the sponseless queen with am'rous wiles,
Before the nobles from the neighb'ring isles. Pope.

SPOUT, n. f. [from spuyt, Dutch.]

1. A pipe, or mouth of a pipe or vessel, out of which any thing is poured.
She gushing to begin some speech, her eyes Became two spouts. Shakespeare.
In whales that breathe, if the water should get into the lungs, an ejection thereof is contrived by a spout or spout at the head. Brown.

If you chance it to lack,
Be it claret or sack,
I'll make this spout
To deal it about,
Or this to run out,
As it were from a spout. Ben Jonson.

As waters did in storms, now pitch runs out,
As lead, when a fir'd church becomes one spout. Donne.

In Gaza they couch vessels of earth in their walls, to gather the wind from the top, and to pass it down in spouts into rooms. Bacon.

Let the water be fed by some higher than the pool, and delivered into it by fan spouts, and then discharged by some equality of bores, that it stay little. Bacon.

In this single cathedral, the very spouts are loaded with ornaments. Addison.

From silver spouts the grateful liquors glide,
And China's earth receives the smoking tide. Pope.

2. Water falling in a body; a cataract, such as is seen in the hot climates, when clouds sometimes discharge all their water at once.

Not the dreadful spout,
Which shipmen do the hurricane call,
Confring'd in mists by the almighty fan,
Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear
In his descent, than shall my prompted sword Falling on Diomedes. Shakespeare.

The force of these motions pressing more in some places than in others, there would fall not showers, but great spouts or cascades of water. Huot.

TO SPOUT, v. a. [from the noun.] To pour with violence, or in a collected body, as from a spout.

We will bear home that lusty blood again,
Which bore we came to spout against your town. Shakespeare.

I intend two fountains, the one that sprinkles or spouteth water, the other a fair receipt of water. Bacon.

She swims in blood, and blood does spouting throw
To heav'n, that heav'n a such a creature might know. Wallar.

Next on his belly floats the mighty whale;
He twists his back, and rears his throat'ning tail.
He spouts the tide. Creech.

TO SPOUT, v. n. To issue as from a spout.
They laid them down hard by the murmuring musk of certain waters, which spouted out of the side of the hills. Widney.

No hands could force it thence, so fixt it stood,
Till out it rush'd, expell'd by streams of spouting blood. Dryden.

It spouts up out of deep wells, and flies forth at the tops of them, upon the face of the ground. Woodward.

All the glittering hill
Is bright with spouting trails. Thomson.
SPRAG, adj. Vigorous; sprightly. A provincial word.

A good sprag memory. Shakespeare.
TO SPRAIN, v. a. [corrupted from strain.]
To stretch the ligaments of a joint without dislocation of the bone.

Should the big last extend the shoe too wide,
The sudden turn may stretch the swelling vein,
Thy cracking joint unhinge, or ankle sprain. Gay.
SPRAIN, n. f. [from the verb.] Extension of the ligaments without dislocation of the joint.

I was in pain, and thought it was with some sprain at tennis. Temple.
SPRAINTS, n. f. The dang of an otter. Dart.

SPRANG. The preterit of spring.
Mankind sprang from one common original, whence this tradition would be universally dissented. Tillotson.

SPRAT, n. f. [sprot, Dutch; sarda, Lat.]
A small sea fish.

So oft, in feasts with costly changes clad,
To crammed maws a sprat new stomach brags. Shelton.

All fairs do lay for porke and fowle,
For sprats and sparlings for their house. Tusser.
Of round fish there are but, sprat, barm, finlets. Carew.

TO SPRAWL, v. n. [spradde, Danish; spar-telen, Dutch.]

1. To struggle, as in the convulsions of death.

Hang the child, that he may see it sprawl;
A sight to vex the father's soul. Shakespeare.
Some lie sprawling on the ground,
With many a gash and bloody wound. Hudibras.

2. To tumble or creep with much agitation and contortion of the limbs.

The birds were not fledged; but, upon sprawling and struggling to get clear of the flame, down they tumbled. L'Estrange.

Telamon hap'd to meet
A rising root that held his fallen'd feet;
So down he fell, whom sprawling on the ground
His brother from the wooden gyves unbound. Dryden.

Hence, long before the child can crawl,
He learns to kick, and wince, and sprawl. Prior.
Did the fiars do this feat once only, which gave beginning to human race? who were there then in the world, to observe the births of those first men, and calculate their nativities, as they sprawl'd out of ditches? Bentley.

He ran, he leapt into a flood,
There sprawl'd a while, and scarce got out,
All cover'd o'er with slime. Swift.

SPRAY, n. f. [of the same race with sprout and spout.]

1. The extremity of a branch.

At fight whereof each bird that sits on sprays,
And every beak that to his den was tied,
Come forth athrust out of their late dimity,
And to the light lit up their drooping head. Hubbard's Fable.

This droops this lofty pine, and hangs his sprays.
Thus Meador's pride dies in her younger days. Shakespeare.

The wind that whistles through the sprays
Maintains the comfort of the long;
And hidden birds, with native lugs,
The golden sleep prolong. Dryden.

2. The foam of the sea, commonly written spry.

Winds raise some of the salt with the spray.
Arbutnot.

TO SPREAD, v. a. [spreedan, Sax. spreyden, Dutch.]

1. To extend; to expand; to make to cover or fill a larger space than before.

He bought a field where he had spread his tent.
Gengis.

Rizpah spread sackcloth for her upon the stocks. Samuel.
Silver spread into plates is brought from Tadmor. Jeremiah.

Faire attendants then
The sheets and bedding of the man of men,
Within a cabin of the hollow keels,
Spread and made soft. Chapman.

Make the trees more tall, more spread, and more hasty than they use to be. Bacon.

Shall funeral eloquence her colours spread,
And scatter roses on the wealthy dead? Young.

2. To cover by extension.
Her cheeks their freshness lose and wanted grace,
And an unusual paleness spreads her face. Grave.

3. To cover over.
The workman melteth a graven image, and the goldsmith spreads it over with gold. Isidore.

4. To stretch; to extend.
Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hair. Shakespeare.
He arose from kneeling, with his hands spread up to heav'n, and he blessed the congregation. 1 Kings.
The stately trees tall spread their branches. Milton.

Deep in a rich alcove the prince was laid,
Fast by his side Pilgrimage lay spread,
Inge his equal, on a splendid bed. Pope.

5. To publish; to divulge; to disseminate.
They, when departed, spread abroad his fame in all that country. Matthew.

6. To emit as effluvia or emanations; to diffuse.

Their course thro' thickest constellations held,
They spread then bane. Milton.

TO SPREAD, v. n. To extend or expand itself.

Can any understand the spreadings of the clouds,
or the route of his tabernacle? Job.

The princes of Germany had but a dull fear of the greatness of Spain, upon a general apprehension only of their spreading and ambitious designs. Bacon.

Plants, if they spread much, are seldom tall. Bacon.

Great Pan, who wont to chase the fair,
And lov'd the spreading oak, was there. Addison.
The valley opened at the farther end, spreading forth into an immense ocean. Addison.

SPREAD, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Extent; compass.
I have got a fine spread of improvable lands;
and am already ploughing up some, fencing others. Addison.

2. Expansion of parts.
No flower hath that spread of the woodbind. Bacon.

SPREYER, n. f. [from spread.]

1. One that spreads.
By conforming ourselves, we should be spreaders of a worse infection than any we are likely to draw from papists, by our conformity with them in ceremonies. Hooker.

2. Publisher; divulger; disseminator.
If it be a mistake, I desire I may not be accused for a spreader of false news. Swift.

SPRINK, part. [from sprenc, to sprinkle;
sprengen, sprengen, Saxon; sprengen, Dutch.] Sprinkled. Obsolete.

O lips, that kiss'd that hand with my tears
sprink. Sidney.

SPRIG, n. f. [sprung, Welsh; so Davies;
but it is probably of the same race with sprung.] A small branch; a spray.

The substance is true ivy; after it is taken down, the friends of the family are desirous to have some sprig to keep. Bacon.

Our chilling climate hardly bears
A sprig of ivy in fifty years;
While every bud his claim alleges,
As it grew in common hedges. Swift.

SPRIG, Chrysal, n. f.
In perpendicular fissures, chrysal is found in form of an hexagonal column, adhering at one end to the stone, and near the other breaking gradually, till it terminates in a point: this is called by lapidaries sprig or rock chrysal. Woodward.

SPRACED. adj. [from spring.] Full of small branches.

SPRIGHT. n. s. [contraction of spirit; spiritus, Latin. It was anciently written sprete or spyte; and spirit, as now written, was long considered in verse as a monosyllable: this word should therefore be spelled sprite, and its derivatives spritely, spriteful; but custom has determined otherwise.]

1. Spirit; shade; soul; incorporeal agent.

She doth display
The gate with pearls and rubies richly dight,
Through which her words to wit do make their way.

To bear the message of her sprite. Spenser.

Earth he called out of deep darkness dread

Legions of sprights, the which, like little flies

Plott'ring about his ever damned head,

Await whereto their service he applies. F. Que. n.

While with heav'nly charity he spoke,

A screaming blaze the silent shadows broke;

The birds obsecrate to forests wing'd their flight,

And gaping graves receiv'd the guilty spright. Dryden.

2. Walking spirit; apparition.

The ideas of goblins and sprights have no more to do with darkness than light; yet let but a foolish mold inculcate these often on the mind of a child, possibly he shall never be able to separate them again. Locke.

3. Power which gives cheerfulness or courage.

O chastity! the chief of heav'nly lights,
Which mak'st us most immortal shape to wear,
Hold thou my heart, establish thou my sprights;
To only thee my constant course I bear,
Till spotless soul unto thy bosom fly;
Such life to lead, such death I vow to die. Sidney.

4. An arrow. Not in use.

We had in use for sea fight short arrows called sprights, without any other heads save wood sharpened; which were discharged out of muskets, and would pierce through the sides of ships where a bullet would not. Bacon.

TO SPRIGHT. v. a. To haunt as a spright.

A ludicrous use.

I am sprighted with a fool. Shakespeare.

SPRIGHTFUL. adj. [spright and full.]

Lively; brisk; gay; vigorous.

The spirit of the time shall teach me speed —

— Spoke like a sprightful noble gentleman. Shakespeare.

Steeds sprightful as the light. Coates.

Happy my eyes when they behold thy face:

My heavy heart will leave its doleful beating

At sight of thee, and bound with sprightful joys. Clayton.

SPRIGHTFULLY. adv. [from sprightful.]

Briskly; vigorously.

Norfolk, sprightfully and bold,

Stays but the summons of the appellant's trumpet. Shakespeare.

SPRIGHTLESS. adj. [from spright.] Dull;

enervated; sluggish.

Are you grown

Benumb'd with fear, or virtue's sprightless cold? Clayton.

SPRIGHTLINESS. n. s. [from sprightly.]

Liveliness; briskness; vigour; gayety;

vivacity.

The soul is clogged when she acts in conjunction with a companion too heavy; but, in dreams, observe with what a sprightliness and alacrity does she exert herself. Addison.

SPRIGHTLY. adj. [from spright.] Gay;

brisk; lively; vigorous; any; vivacious.

Produce the wine that makes us bold,

And sprightly wit and love inspires. Dryden.

When now the sprightly trumpet, from afar,

Had giv'n the signal of approaching war. Dryden.

Each morn they wak'd me with a sprightly lay:

Of opening heav'n they sung, and gladsome day. Prior.

The sprightly Sylvia trips along the green;

She runs, but hopes she does not run unseen. Pope.

TO SPRING. v. n. pret. spring or sprang; anciently sprong; part. sprung. [*sprin-*gan, Saxon; springen, Dutch.]

1. To arise out of the ground, and grow, by vegetative power.

All best virtues,
All you unpubl'd virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears; be aidant and remediate
In the good man's distress. Shakespeare.

To his musick plants and flowers

Ever sprung, as inn and flowers

There had made a lasting spring. Shakespeare.

To satisfy the desolate ground, and cause the bud of the tender herb to spring forth. Job.

Other fell on good ground, and did yield fruit that sprung up and increased. Mark.

Tell me, in what happy fields

The thistle springs, to which the lily yields? Pope.

2. To begin to grow.

That the nipples should be made with such perforations as to admit passage to the milk when drawn, otherwise to retain it; and the teeth of the young not sprung, are effects of providence. Ray.

3. To proceed as from seed.

Ye shall eat this year such things as grow of themselves; and in the second year that which springs of the same. 2 Kings.

Much more good of sin shall spring. Milton.

4. To come into existence; to issue forth.

Hadst thou sway'd as kings should do,
Giving no ground unto the house of York,
They never then had sprung like summer flies. Shakespeare.

Ev'n thought meets thought, ere from the lips it peet.

And each warm with springs mutual from the heart. Pope.

5. To arise; to appear; to begin to appear or to exist.

When the day began to spring, they let her go. Judges.

To them which sat in the region and shadow of death, light is sprung up. Matthew.

Fly, fly, prophane fogs! far hence fly away,

Taint not the pure streams of the springing day

With your dull influence: it is for you

To sit and cowl upon night's heavy brow. Craigh.

Do not blast my springing hopes,

Which thy kind hand has planted in my soul. Rowe.

6. To issue with effect or force.

Swift fly the years, and rise the expected morn!

Oh spring to light, auspicious babe, be born! Pope.

7. To proceed as from ancestors, or a country.

How youngling he began to serve his country,

In a long continued; and what stock he springs of;

The noble house of Marcus. Shakespeare.

Our Lord sprung out of Judea. Hebrews.

Shall, like the brethren sprung of dragon's teeth,

Ruin each other, and be fall amongst 'em. Johnson.

Heroes of old, by rapine and by spoil,

In search of fame did all the world embroil;

Thus to their gods each then allied his name,

This sprung from Jove, and that from Titan came. Graville.

8. To proceed as from a ground, cause, or reason.

They found new hope to spring

Out of despair. Milton.

Some have been deceived into an opinion, that the inheritance of rule over men, and property in things, sprung from the same original, and descend by the same rules. Lake.

9. To grow; to thrive.

What makes all this but Jupiter the king,

At whose command we perish and we spring?

Then 'tis our best, since thus ordain'd to die,

To make a virtue of necessity. Dryden.

10. To bound; to leap; to jump; to rush hastily; to appear suddenly.

Some strange commotion

Is in his brain; he bites his lip, and starts;

Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,

Then lays his finger on his temple; straight

springs out into full gait, then stops again. Shakespeare.

I sprung not more in joy at first hearing he was a man child, than slow in first seeing he had proved himself a man. Shakespeare.

He called for a light, and sprung in, and fell before Paul. Acts.

When heav'n was nam'd, they lov'd their land

again; Acts.

Then sprung she forth, they follow'd her amon. Dryden.

Afraid to sleep,

Her blood all fever'd, with a furious leap

She sprung from bed. Dryden.

Nor lies the long; but, as her fates ordain,

Springs up to life; and, flesh to second pain,

Is lay'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain. Dryden.

See, aw'd by heav'n, the blooming Hebrews;

Her artful tongue, and more persuasive eyes;

And, sprung from her disappointed arms,

Prefers a dunce on to forbidden charms. Blackmore.

The mountain flag that springs

From height to height, and bounds along the plain,

Nor has a matter to restrain his course,

That mountain flag would Vanou rather be

Than be a slave. Philips.

11. To fly with elastic power; to start.

A link of horsehair, that will easily slip, enters to the end of the stick that springs. Motimer.

12. To rise from a covert.

My doors are hateful to my eyes,

Fill'd and damm'd up with gaping creditors,

Watchful as towers when their game will spring. Clayton.

A covey of partridges springs in our front, put our infantry in disorder. Addison.

13. To issue from a fountain.

Israel's servants digged in the valley, and found a well of springs water. Genesis.

Let the wide world his praises sing;

Where Tigris and Euphrates springs;

And from the Danube's frothy banks to those

Where from an unknown head great Nilus flows. Roscommon.

14. To proceed as from a source.

'Tis true from force the noblest title springs,

I therefore hold from that which first made kings. Dryden.

15. To shoot; to issue with speed and violence.

Then shook the sacred fl mine, and sudden light

sprung thro' the vaulted roof, and made the temple

bright:

The pow'r behold! the pow'r in glory shone,

By her bent bow and her keen arrows known. Dryden.

The friendly gods springs gods enlarge'd;

The fleet swift tiding o'er the furies flew,

Till Grecian clouds appear'd. Pope.

TO SPRING. v. a.

1. To start; to rouse game.

Thus I reclaim'd my buzzard love to fly

At what, and when, and how, and where I chaf'd;

Now negligent of sport I lie;

And now, as other lawbreakers use,

I sprung a mistress, swear, write, sigh, and die;

And the game kill'd, or lost, go talk or lie. Dumfries.

That sprung the game you were to let,

Before you'd time to draw the net. Hudibras.

A large cock pheasant he sprung in one of the neighbouring woods. Spectator.

Here I use a great deal of diligence before I can

spring any thing; whereas in town, whilst I am following one character, I am crossed by another, that they puzzle the chase. Addison.

See how the well-taught pointer leads the way!

The lent grows warm, he stops, he springs the prey. Gay.

2. To produce quickly or unexpectedly.

The nurse, surpris'd with fright,

Starts up and leaves her bed, and springs a light. Dryden.

Thus man by his own strength to heav'n would in soar,

And would not be oblig'd to God for more:

Vain, wretched creature, how art thou misled!

To think thy wit these godlike notions bred!

These truths are not the product of thy mind;

But drop from heav'n, and of a nobler kind:

Reveal'd religion first inform'd thy light

And reason saw not, till faith sprung the light. Dryden.

He that has such springing zeal, and spring such mighty discoveries, must needs be an admirable patriot. Collier.

3. To make by starting: applied to a ship. People discharge themselves of burdensome reflections, as of the cargo of a ship that has sprung a leak.

No more accuse thy pen; but charge the crime On native sloth, and negligence of time: Beware the publick laughter of the town, Thou spring'st a leak already in thy crown. Dryden.
Whether the spring a leak, I cannot find, Or whether the was overlet with wind, But down at once with all her crew she went. Dryden.

4. To discharge: applied to a mine. Our miners discovered several of the enemies mines, who have sprung divers others which did little execution. Tatler.

5. To contrive on a sudden; to produce hastily; to offer unexpectedly.

The friends to the cause spring a new project, and it was advertised that the crisis could not appear, till the ladies had shewn their zeal against the Pretender. Swift.

6. To pass by leaping. A barbarous use. Unbecoming skill To spring the fence, to rein the prancing steed. Thomson.

7. Of the verb spring the primary sense is to grow out of the ground: so plants spring, thence spring the season; so water spring, thence spring a fountain. Plants rise unexpectedly, and waters break out violently; thence any thing done suddenly, or coming hastily, is said to spring; thence spring means an elastic body. Thus the active significations all import suddenness or force.

SPRING. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The season in which plants rise and vegetate; the vernal season. Orpheus with his lute made trees, And the mountain-tops that freeze;

Bow themselves when he did sing: To his musick plants and flowers Ever spring, as sun and showers

There had made a lasting spring. Shakespeare.
The spring visiteth not these quarters, to touch the eastern parts. Cervantes.

Come, gentle spring, ethereal mildness come, And from the bosom of yon dropping cloud Upon our plains descend. Thomson.

2. An elastic body; a body which, when distorted, has the power of restoring itself to its former state

This may be performed by the strength of some such spring as is used in watches. the spring may be applied to one wheel, which shall give an equal motion to both the wheels. Wilkins.

The spring must be made of good steel, well tempered, and the wider the two ends of the spring stand asunder, the milder is the chope of the vice open. Morton.

He that was sharp-sighted enough to see the configuration of the minute particles of the spring of a clock, and upon what peculiar impulse its elastic motion depends, would no doubt discover something very admirable. Locke.

3. Elastic force.

Heav'n's, what a spring was in his arm, to throw! How high he held his shield, and rose at ev'ry blow! Dryden.

Bodies which are absolutely hard, or so soft as to be void of elasticity, will not rebound from one another: impenetrability makes them only stop. If two equal bodies meet directly in vacuo, they will by the laws of motion stop where they meet, lose their motion, and remain in rest; unless they be elastic, and receive new motion from their spring. Newton.

The soul is gathered within herself, and recovers that spring, which is weakened when she operates more in concert with the body. Addison.

In adult persons, when the fibres cannot any more yield, they must break, or lose their spring. Arbutnot.

4. Any active power; any cause by which motion or action is produced or propagated.

My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak, And every slacken'd fibre drops its hold, Like nature letting down the spring of life; So much the name of father awes me still. Dryden.
Nature is the fume, and man is the fame, has the same affections and passions, and the same *spring*s that give them motion. Rymer.

5. A leap; a bound; a jump; a violent effort; a sudden struggle.

The prisoner with a spring from prison broke; Then stretch'd his teatler'd fans with all his might, And to the neighbouring maple wing'd his flight. Dryden.

With what a spring his furious soul broke loose, And left the limbs still quivering on the ground! Addison.

6. A leak; a start of plank.

Each petty hand Can steer a ship becalm'd; but he that will Govern, and carry her to her ends, must know His tides, his currents, how to shift his goal; Where her *spring*s are, her leaks, and how to stop 'em. Ben Jonson.

7. A fountain; an issue of water from the earth.

Now stop thy *spring*s; my sea shall suck them dry, And swell so much the higher by their ebb. Shakespeare.
*Spring*s on the tops of hills pass through a great deal of pure earth, with less mixture of other waters. Bocon.

When in th' effects she doth the causes know, And seeing the stream, thinks where the spring doth rise;

And seeing the branch, conceives the root below; These things she views without the body's eyes. Darwin.

He adds the running *spring*s and standing lakes, And bounding banks for wading rivers makes. Dryden.

Nile hears him knocking at his cavern'd gates, And looks his hidden spring, and fears his nephews fates. Dryden.

He bathed himself in cold spring water in the midst of winter. Locke.

The water that falls down from the clouds, sinking into beds of rock or clay, breaks out in *spring*s, commonly at the bottom of hilly ground. Locke.

8. A source; that by which any thing is supplied.

To that great spring which doth great kingdoms move,

The sacred spring whence right and honour streams, Diffusing virtue, flowing peace and love In every place, as Cynthia's beams her beams. Darwin.

I move, I see, I speak, I do, and I know; Though now I am, I was not always so: Then that from which I was made be before, Whom, as my spring of being, I adore. Dryden.

Rolling down through so many barbarous ages, from the spring of Virgil, it bears along with it the filth of the Goths and Vandals. Dryden.

He has a secret spring of spiritual joy, and the continual feast of a good conscience within, that forbids him to be miserable. Bentley.

9. Rise; beginning.

About the spring of the day, Samuel called Saul to the top of the house. 1 Samuel.

10. Cause; original.

The season of the quicker or slower termination of this dilemma, arises from these three *spring*s. Blackmore.

The first *spring*s of great events, like those of great rivers, are often mean and little. Swift.

SPRING. } n. f. A youth. Obsolete.

SPRINGAL. } Before the bull the pictur'd winged love, With his young brother sport, light fluttering Upon the waves, as each had been a dove; The one his bow and shafts, the other spring. A burning tread about his head did move As in their fire's new love both triumphing. Spenser.

SPRINGE. n. f. [from spring.] A gin; a noose which, fastened to any elastic body, catches by a spring or jerk.

As a woodcock to my own springe, Ofrick, I'm justly kill'd with mine own treachery. Shakspeare.
Let goats for food their loads adders lend, But neither springes, nets, nor snares employ. Dryden.
With many springes we the birds betray, Slight lines of hair torquise the shany prey. Pope.

SPRINGER. n. f. [from spring.] One who routes game.

SPRINGHALT. n. f. [spring and halt.] A lameness by which the horse twitches up his legs.

They've all new legs, and lame ones: one would take it, That never saw them pace before, the spavin And springhalt reign'd among them. Shakspeare.

SPRINGINESS. n. f. [from springy.] Elasticity; power of restoring itself.

Where there is a continued endeavour of the parts of a body to put themselves into another state, the progress may be much more slow; since it was a great while before the texture of the corpuscles of the fluid were so altered as to make them lose their former springiness. Boyle.

The air is a thin fluid body, endowed with elasticity and springiness, capable of condensation and rarefaction. Bentley.

SPRINGLE. n. f. [from spring.] A spring; an elastic noose.

Woodcocks arrive first on the north coast, where every plain shoot to catch for springles to take them. Carew.

To SPRINGLE. v. a. Misprinted, I suppose, for sprinkle.

This is Timon's last, Who, slack and spangled with your flatteries, Withdrew off, and springles in your faces Your recking villany. Shakspeare.

SPRINGTIDE. n. f. [spring and tide.] Tide at the new and full moon; high tide.

Love, like springtides, full and high, Swells in every youthful vein; But each tide does less supply, Till they quite shrink in again If a flow in age appear. Dryden.

'Tis but rain, and runs not clear. Dryden.
Mult people die when the moon chiefly reigns; that is, in the night, or upon or near a springtide. Grew.

SPRINGY. adj. [from spring.]

1. Elastic; having the power of restoring itself.

Had not the Maker wrought the springy frame, Such as it is, to suit the vital flame, The blood, detain'd of its introus food, Had cool'd and languish'd in the arterial road; While the triad to art had flown, with traitless pain, To push the lazy tide along the vein. Blackmore.

This vast contraction and expansion forms untelligible, by turning the particles of air to be springy and elastic, or rolled up like hoops, or by any other means than a repulsive power. Newton.

Though the bundle of fibres which constitute the muscles may be small, the fibres may be strong and springy. Arbutnot.

If our arch had not been a springy body, no animal could have executed the very function of respiration; and yet the ends of respiration are not served by that springy quality, but by some other unknown quality. Bentley.

2. [from spring.] Full of springs or fountains. Not used.

Where the sandy or gravelly lands are springy or wet, rather mud them for gravel than corn. Mortimer.

Early, ere the odorous breath of morn
Awakes the slumbering leaves, or tuff'd horn
Shakes the high thicket, hie I all about,
Number my ranks, and visit every sprout. Milton.
To this kid, taken out of the womb, were brought in the tender sprouts of shrubs; and, after it had tasted, it began to eat of such as are the usual food of goats. Ray.

SPROUTS. n. f. pl. [from sprout.] Young coleworts.

SPRUCE. adj. [Skinner derives this word from sprux, French; but he proposes it with hesitation: Junius thinks it comes from sprout: Cassaubon trifles yet more contemptibly. I know not whence to deduce it, except from pruce. In ancient books we find furniture of pruce a thing costly and elegant, and thence probably came spruce.] Nice; trim; neat without elegance. It was anciently used of things with a serious meaning; it is now used only of persons, and with levity.

The tree
That wraps that chrysal in a wooden tomb,
Shall be took up spruce, fill'd with diamond. Donne.
Thou wilt not leave me in the middle street,
Tho' some more spruce companion thou dost meet. Donne.

Along the crisped shades and bow'rs
Reveals the spruce and jocund spring;
The graces, and the rosy-bosom'd hours,
Thither all their bounties bring. Milton.

I must not slip into too spruce a style for serious matters; and yet I approve not that dull insipid way of writing practised by many chymists.
He put his hand and beard in order,
The sprucer to accost and board her. Hudibras.
He is so spruce, that he can never be genteel. Tatler.

Of spirituous and fiery spume, all touch'd
With heaven's ray, and temper'd, they shoot forth
So beauteous, up'ning to the ambient light. Milton.

Waters frozen in pans, after their dissolution, leave a froth and spume upon them, which is caused by the airy part diffused, by the congelable mixture. Brown.

To SPUME. v. n. [spumo, Latin.] To foam; to froth.

SPUMOUS. } adj. [spumous, Latin; from

SPUMY. } the noun.] Frothy; foamy.
The cause is the putrefaction of the body by natural heat: the putrifying parts suffer a turbulence, and becoming airy and spumous, ascend into the surface of the water. Brown.

Not with more madness, rolling from afar,
The spumy waves proclaim the wat'ry war,
And mounting upwards with a mighty roar,
March onwards, and insult the rocky shore. Dryden.

The spumous and florid state of the blood, in passing through the lungs, arises from its own elasticity, and its violent motion, the aerial particles expanding themselves. Arbutnot.

SPUN. The pret. and part. pass. of spin.

The nymph nor spin, nor dress'd with artful pride,
Her vest was gather'd up, her hair was tied. Addison.

SPUNGE. n. f. [spongia, Latin.] A sponge.

See SPONGE.

When he needs what you have gleaned, it is but squeezing you, and, spunge, you shall be dry again. Shakspeare.

Considering the motion that was impressed by the painter's hand upon the sponge, compounded with the specific gravity of the sponge, and the resistance of the air, the sponge did mechanically and unavoidably move in that particular line of motion. Boyle.

To SPUNGE. v. n. [rather To sponge.]

To hang on others for maintenance.

This will maintain you, with the perquisite of sponging while you are young. Swift.

SPUNGINGHOUSE. n. f. [sponge and house.] A house to which debtors are taken before commitment to prison.

where the bailiffs sponge upon them, or riot at their cost.
A bailiff kept you the whole evening in a sponginghouse. Swift.

SPUNGY. adj. [from sponge.]

1. Full of small holes, and soft like a sponge.
Some English wool, vex'd in a Belgian loom,
And into cloth of spungy texture made,
Did into France or colder Denmark rooms,
to ruin with worse air our staple trade. Dryden.

2. Wet; moist; watery.

I saw Jove's bird, the Roman eagle, wing'd
From the spungy south to this part of the west,
There vanish'd in the sun-beams. Shakspeare.

3. Having the quality of imbibing.

There is a lady of more softer bowels,
More spungy to suck in the fangs of fears. Shaksp.
PUNK. n. f. Rotten wood; touchwood.
See SPONGE.

To make white powder, the best way is by the sunder of rotten willows: spunk, or touchwood prepared, might perhaps make it rustier. Brown.

PUR. n. f. [spuna, Saxon; spore, Danish, Islandick, and Dutch; esperon, French.]

A sharp point fixed in the rider's heel, with which he pricks his horse to drive him forward.

He borrowing that homely armour for want of a better, had come upon the spur to redeem Philosophy's picture. Sidney.

Whether the body politick be
A horse whereon the governor doth ride,
And, newly in the seat, that it may know
It can command it, lets it straight feel the spur.
Shakspere.

He presently set spurs to his horse, and departed with the rest of the company. Knolles.

Was I for this entitled Sir,
A girl with rusty sword and spur,
To sue and honour to wage battle? Hudibras.

Incitement; incitation. It is used with to before the effect. Dryden has used it with of; but, if he speaks properly, he means to make the following word personal.

Seeing then that nothing can move, unless there be some end, the desire whereof provoketh into-tion, how should that divine power of the soul, that part of our mind, ever stir itself into action,
unless it have also the like spur? Hooker.

What need we any spur, but our own cause,
To prick us to redress? Shakspere.

His laws are deep, and not vulgar; not made upon the spur of a particular occasion, but out of consideration of the future; to make his people more and more happy. Bacon.

Reward is the spur of virtue in all good arts, all valuable attempts, and emulation, which is the other spur, will never be wanting, when particular wards are proposed. Dryden.

The chief, if not only, spur to human industry and action, is meanness. Locke.

The former may be a spur to the latter, till age takes him in love with the study, without any balldish bait. Chenue.

A stimulus; a prick; any thing that galls and teases.

Great and patience, rooted in him both,
Engle their spurs together. Shakspere.

The sharp points on the legs of a cock with which he fights.

Of birds the bill is of like matter with the teeth;
for their spur, it is but a nail. Bacon.

Animals have natural weapons to defend and kill, some talons, some claws, some spurs and teeth. Ray.

he pine and cedar. Shakspere.

SPUR. v. a. [from the noun.]

To prick with the spur; to drive with the spur.

My friend, who always takes care to cure his horse of starting fits, spurred him up to the very top of the coach. Addison.

Your father, when he mounted,
could 'em in strongly, and he spurred them hard.
Dryden.

Who would be at the trouble of learning, when he finds his ignorance is censured? But when a brow-beat and man them, you make them on, for though they have no natural mettle; yet, they are spurred and kicked, they will mend or pace. Collier.

To instigate; to incite; to urge forward.

Lovers break not hours,
Let it be to come before their time:
Teach they spur their expedition. Shakspere.
Let the awe he has got upon their minds be to tempered with the marks of good-will, that affection may spur them to their duty. Lacke.

3. To drive by force.

Love will not be spurred to what it loaths. Shaksp.
To SPUR. v. n.

1. To travel with great expedition.

With backward bows the Parthians shall be there,
And, spurring from the fight, console their tear:
A double wreath shall crown our Caesar's brows.
Dryden.

2. To press forward.

Alcarnus took th' alarm, while yet he led,
And, spurring on, his equals soon o'erpaids. Dryden.
Some bold men, though they begin with infinite ignorance and error, yet, by spurring on, refine themselves. Crowe.

SPUR-GALLED. adj. [spur and gall.] Hurt with the spur.

I was not made a horse,
And yet I bare a burthen like an ass,
Spur-gall'd and tir'd by jaunting Bohungbroke.
Shakspere.

What! shall each spur-gall'd hackney of the day,
Or each new-pension'd tyophaunt, pretend
To break my windows, if I treat a friend? Pope.

SPURGE. n. f. [espurge, Fr. spurgie, Dut.
from purgo, Lat.] A plant violently purgative. Spurge is a general name in English for all milky purgative plants.
Skinner.

Every part of the plant abounds with a milky juice. There are seventy-one species of this plant, of which warts are one. Broad-leaved spurge is a biennial plant, and used in medicine under the name of cataputia minor. The milky juice in these plants is used by some to destroy warts, but particular care should be taken in the application, because it is a strong caustick. Miller.

That the leaves of cataputia, or spurge, being plucked upwards or downwards, perform their operations by purge or vomit, is a strange conceit, ascribing unto plants positional operations. Brown.

SPURGE FLAX. n. f. [thymelaea, Lat.] A plant.

SPURGE. Laurel or Mezzercon. n. f. [chamaedaphne, Lat.] A plant.

SPURGE OLIVE. n. f. [chamaelea, Lat.] A shrub.

SPURGE WORT. n. f. [tiphon, Lat.] A plant.

SPURIOUS. adj. [spurius, Latin.]

1. Not genuine; counterfeit; adulterine.
Reformed churches reject not all traditions, but such as are spurious, superstitious, and not consonant to the prime rule of faith. Whit.

The coin that shows the first is generally rejected as spurious, nor is the other esteemed more authen-tick by the present Roman medalists. Addison.

If any thing else has been printed, in which we really had any hand, it is loaded with spurious additions. Saunders.

2. Not legitimate; bastard.

Your Scipios, Cæsars, Pompeys, and your Catos,
These gods on earth, are all the spurious brood
Of violated maids. Addison.

SPURIOUSNESS. n. f. [from spurious.]
Adulterateness; state of being counterfeit.

You proceed to Hippolytus, and speak of his spuriousness with as much confidence as if you were able to prove it. Waterland.

SPURRING. n. f. [esperlan, Fr.] A small sea-fish.

All-faints, do lay for porke and sowfe,
For spirats and spurlings for your house. Tusser.

TO SPURN. v. a. [spornan, Saxon.]

1. To kick; to strike or drive with the foot.

They suppos'd I could rend bars of steel,
And spurn in pieces posts of adamant. Shakspere.
Say my request's unjust,
And spurn me back; but if it be not so,
Thou art not honest. Shakspere.

You that did vend your rheum upon my beard,
And foot me as you spurn a stranger car
Over your threshold. Shakspere.

He in the surging smoke
Uplifted spurn'd the ground. Milton.

So was I forc'd
To do a sovereign justice to myself;
And spurn thee from my presence. Dryden.

Then will I draw up my legs, and spurn her from me with my foot.

A milk-white bull shall at your altars stand,
That threats a fight, and spurns the rising sand.
Pope.

When Athens sinks by fates unjust,
When wild barbarians spurn her dust.
Now they, who reach Parnassus' lofty crown,
Employ their pains to spurn some others down.
Pope.

2. To reject; to scorn; to put away with contempt; to disdain.

In wisdom I should ask your name;
But since thy outside looks so fair and warlike,
What late and meely I might well delay,
By rule of knight-hood, I disdain and spurn. Shaksp.

3. To treat with contempt.

It is the new Arion sail,
The late still trembling underneath thy nail:
At thy well-sharpen'd thumb from shore to shore,
The trebles squeak for fear, the bates roar. Dryden
Blunderbusses, planted in every loop-hole, go off at the squeaking of a bell, and the humming of a guitar. Dryden
Who can endure to hear one of the rough old Romans squeaking through the mouth of an cannon? Addison
How like lutes organs are to ours
They grant, if higher powers think fit,
A hear might soon be made a wit;
And that, for any thing in nature,
Pigs might squeak love odes, do's back satire. Pope

In flood impotent he speaks,
And, by the prompter breathes, the puppet squeals Zoilus calls the companions of Ulysses the squeaking pigs of Ithaca. Pope

3. To break silence or secrecy for fear or pain.

SQUEAMISH, adj. [for quæmish or
qualmish, from qualm.] Nice; fastidious; easily disgusted; having the stomach easily turned; being apt to take offence without much reason. It is used always in dislike either real or ironical.

Yet, for counten nice tale, he seemed very squæmish in respect of the charge he had of the prince's Pamela. Sidey

Quoth he, that honour's very squæmish,
That takes a bating for a blench,
For what's more honourable than tears,
Or finite tatters rent in wars? Hudibras

His smile is rubick, and perhaps too plain
The men of squæmish taste to entertain. Southey

It is rare to see a man at once squæmish and voracious. Southey

There is no occasion to oppose the ancients and the moderns, or to be squæmish on either side.
He that wisely collects his mind in the pursuit of knowledge, will gather what lights he can from either. Leland

SQUEAMISHLY, adv. [from squæmish.] In a fastidious manner.

SQUEAMISHNESS, n. f. [from squæmish.]
Niceness; delicacy; fastidiousness.

The thorough-paced politician must look at the squæmishness of his conference, and read it another lecture. Southey

Upon their principles they may receive the worship of the host of heaven, it is but conquering a little squæmishness of stomach. Scott

To administer this dose, fifty thousand operators, considering the squæmishness of some stomachs, and the peevishness of young children, is but reasonable. Southey

To SQUEEZE, v. a. [squjan, Saxon; ys-gwaifu, Welsh.]

1. To press; to crush between two bodies.

It is applied to the squeezing or pressing of things downwards, as in the pulley for printing. Watkins

The sinking of the earth would make a convulsion of the air, and that crack must so shake or squeeze the atmosphere, as to bring down all the remaining vapours. Barnet

He reap'd the product of his labour'd ground,
And squeeze'd the combs with golden liquor crown'd. Dryden

None acted mournings forc'd to flow,
Or squeeze his eyes to make the torrent flow. Dryden

stand,
If gentle Pausan had not squeeze her hand? Pope

2. To oppress; to crush; to harass by extortion.

In a civil war people must expect to be crushed and squeezed toward the burden. L'Esclapart

3. To force between close bodies.

To SQUEEZE, v. n.

1. To act or pass, in consequence of compression.

A cometary sphere of gold filled with water and folded up, upon pressing the sphere with great force, let the water squeeze through it, and stand all over its mouth in a multitude of small drops, like dew, without lancing or cracking the body of the gold. Newton

What crowds of these, impatiently bold,
In founts and jingling syllables grown old,
Still run on poets, in a raging vein,
Even to the dregs and squeeze of the brain. Pope

2. To force way through close bodies.

Many a public minister comes empty, but when he has crammed his guts, he is able to squeeze hard before he can get off. Johnson

SQUEEZE, n. f. [from the verb.] Compression; pressure.

A subtle air it stands with wind, and
That bears imprints of winds, of gentlest sort
Than those that erst lazarous and cruel
Peaceful they sleep, but let the tuneful squeeze
Of lab'ring elbow rouse them, out they fly
Melodious, and with purely accents charm. Philips

SQUEECH, n. f. Heavy fall. A low ludicrous word.

He tore the earth which he had fix'd
From squeech of knight, and horn'd and ray'd. Hudibras

So soon as the poor devil had recovered the squeech, away he leaped, bowing, like mad. Johnson

SQUIB, n. f. [squib, German, to push forward.] This etymology, though the best that I have found, is not very probable.]

1. A small pipe of paper filled with wildfire. Used in sport.

The armada at Cadix, Sir Walter Raleigh was wont pretty to say, were suddenly driven away with squibs, for it was no more than a stratagem of the boats men'sy and sent upon them. Bacon

The best of the fourth company the French valour to a squib, or set of fire, which burns and crackles for a time, but finally extinguishes. Hovel

Lampoons, like squibs, may make a pretent blaze.

But true, and thund'ring, pay respect to bays. Waller Unwonted beams his teeth
Drives out his eye a bow in each,
With squibs and crackers and, to throw
Among the trembling crowd below. Swift

Crackles on vesper, as squibs on triumphs want,
Proclaim the glory, and augment the hate. Young

Is it probable that he, who had met whole armies in battle, should now throw away his staff out of fear of a dog? Broome.

2. A prop; a support.

Hope is a lover's staff; walk hence with that, And manage it against despairing thoughts Shakespeare.

The boy was the very staff of my age, my very prop. Shakespeare.

If a subject be a son, then ought he to be a staff unto his father, wherewith not to strike, but to sustain him Holbydn.

3. A stick used as a weapon; a club; the handle of an edged or pointed weapon. A club properly includes the notion of weight, and the staff of length.

I cannot strike at wretched kernes, whose arms are lord to bear their forces. Shakespeare.

He that bought the skin ran greater risk than other that sold it, and had the worse end of the staff. Strange.

With forks and flava the felon they pursue. Dryden.

4. Any long piece of wood.

He forthwith from the glittering staff unfurled Th' imperial eagle. Milton.

To his single eye, that in his forehead glaid Like a torch in sun, or a broad burn'd flail, A forked staff we did so by agreed, Which, in the spacious tacket turning round, Scoop'd out the big round belly from its orb. Addison.

5. Round or step of a ladder.

Defending and the doughty holders, I entered at one of six hundred and thirty-nine flaves, or eighty-nine fathoms. Brown.

6. An ensign of an officer; a badge of authority.

Notwithstanding this staff, mine office-badge in court, Was broke in twain. Shakespeare.

All his officers take their flaves, but at then return new flaves were delivered unto them. Hayward.

7. [Staff, Icelandic.] A stanza; a series of verses regularly disposed, so as that, when the series is concluded, the same order begins again.

Cowley found out that no kind of staff is proper for an heroic poem, as being all too lyrical; yet though he wrote in couplets, where rhyme is free from constraint, he affects half verses. Dryden.

When Cato once a parricide show'd, He bent him with a staff of his own ode. Hart.

STAFFISH, adj. [from staff.] Staff; harsh. Obsolete.

A wit in youth not over dull, heavy, knotty, and lumpy, but hard, tough, and, though somewhat staffish, both for learning and whole course of living, prove always best. Alcham.

STAFFETREE, n. f. A sort of evergreen privet.

STAG, n. f. [Of this word I find no derivation.] The male red deer; the male of the hind.

To the place a poor frequented floor, That from the hunter's aim had taken a hurt, Did come to languish. Shakespeare.

The swift stag from under ground Bore up his branching head Milton.

The inhabitants of seas and skies shall change; And fish on shore, and fowls in air shall range. Dryden.

The stag Hears his own feet, and thinks they sound like more, And fears his hind legs will o'ertake his fore. Pope.

STAGE, n. f. [stage, Fr.]

1. A floor raised to view, on which any show is exhibited; a raised floor of temporary use.

2. The theatre; the place of scenic entertainments.

And much good do't you then, Brave plume and velvet men:

Can feed on ort; and, safe in your stage clothes, Dare quit, upon your oaths, The flagers and the stage wrights too. Ben Jonson.

Those two Mytilene brethren, basely born, crept out of a small palpit unto the majesty of great kings. Herein adorne the wonderful changes and chances of these worldly things, now up, now down, as if the life of man were dot of much more certainty than a stage play. Knollys.

I maintain, against the enemies of the stage, that patterns of piety, decently represented, may second the precepts. Dryden.

One Livius Andronicus was the first stage player in Rome. Dryden.

Knights, squires, and steeds must enter on the stage. Pope.

3. Any place where any thing is publickly transacted or performed.

When we are born, we cry that we are come To this great stage of tools. Shakespeare.

4. [statio, Lat.] A place in which rest is taken on a journey; as much of a journey as is performed without intermission.

I shall put you in mind where it was you promised to set out, or begin your first stage; and to teach you to go before me as my guide. Hammond.

Our next stage brought us to the mouth of the Tiber. Addison.

From thence compell'd by craft and age She makes the head her last stage. Prior.

We must not expect that our journey through the several stages of this life should be all smooth and even. Atcheson.

By opening a passage from Muscovy to China, and marking the several stages, it was a journey of to many days. Baker.

Men drop in fast, ere life's mid stage we tread, Few know to many friends alive as dead. Young.

5. A single step of gradual process.

The changes and vicissitudes in wars are many; but chiefly in the heats or stages of the war, the weapons, and the manner of the conduct. Bacon.

This is by some called the first stage of a consumption, but I had rather call it an ill habit preparatory to that disorder. Blackmore.

To prepare the soul to be a fit inhabitant of that holy place to which we aspire, is to be brought to perfection by gradual advances through several hard and laborious stages of discipline. Rogers.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion. Shoep.

To STAGE, v. a. [from the noun.] To exhibit publickly. Out of the

I love the people;

Put do not like to stage me to their eyes;

Though it do well, I do not relish well

Then loud applause. Shakespeare.

The quick comedians

Extemp'rally will stage us, and present

Our Alexandrian revells. Shakespeare.

STAGECOACH, n. f. [stage and coach.]

A coach that keep its stages; a coach that passes and repales on certain days for the accommodation of passengers.

The story was told me by a priest, as we travelled in a stagecoach. Addison.

When late their busy sides stagecoaches show,

And then to horse through the town move slow,

Then let the prudent walker shoes provide. Gay.

STAGEPLAY, n. f. [stage and play.]

Theatrical entertainment.

This rough cast unknown poetry was instead of stage plays for one hundred and twenty years. Dryden.

STAGEPLAYER, n. f. One who publickly represents actions on the stage.

Among slaves who exercised polite arts, none fold to do as stageplayers or actors. Lebanon.

You, safe in your stage clothes,

Dare quit, upon your oaths,

The flagers and the stage wrights too. Ben Jonson.

2. One who has long acted on the stage of life; a practitioner; a person of cunning.

I've heard old cunning flagers

Say, fools for argument uses wagers. Phidias.

One experienced flager, that had baffled many traps and tricks before, discovered the plot. Le Sage.

Some flagers of the wiser sort

Made all thine idle wonderments their sport;

But he, who heard what every fool could say,

Would never fix his thought, but train'd his me away. Dryden.

One cries out, these flagers

Come in good time to make more work for wagers. Dryden.

Be by a parson cheated!

Had you been cunning flagers,

You might yourselves be treated

By captious and by major. Swift.

To STAGGER, v. n. [staggeren, Dutch.]

1. To reel; not to stand or walk steadily.

He began to appear sick and giddy, and stagger; after which he fell down as dead. Deer.

He truck with all his might

Fall on the helmet of th' unwary Iugh

Deep was the wound, he stagger'd with the blow. Deer.

Then revelling the Tentyrites invade,

By giddy heads and staggering his betray'd. Deer.

The immediate forerunners of an apoplexy are vertigo, staggering, and loss of memory. Deer.

2. To faint; to begin to give way.

The enemy staggered, at you'd blow your blow, he falls at your feet; but if you'd wait a while, he will recover his strength. Deer.

3. To hesitate; to fall into doubt; to become less confident or determined.

A man may, if he were fearful, stagger in the attempt. Deer.

He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith. Deer.

Three means to fortify belief are experience, reason, and authority; of these the most potent is authority; for belief upon reason, or experience will stagger. Deer.

No heretics desire to stagger

Their light opinions like these Epiphanies;

For to their staggering thoughts are comfort, And other men's silent their doubt and awe. Deer.

If thou confidently depend on the truth of a without any doubting or staggering, thou wilt be accepted by God. Deer.

But let it inward sink and throw my road

Fate hood shall want its triumph. I began

To stagger; but I'll prop myself with mine. Deer.

To STAGGER, v. a.

1. To make to stagger; to make to reel.

That hand shall turn in never-quenching rage

That staggers thus my person. Deer.

1. A kind of horrid apoplexy.

This is the path cure of the liver, stark raving the flagers. Deer.

2. Madnefs; wild conduct; irregular behaviour. Out of use.

I will throw thee from my care for ever

Into the flagers, and the careless lap

Of youth and ignorance. Deer.

STAGNANCE, n. f. [from stagnant.] The state of being without motion or ventilation.

STAGNANT. adj. [Stagnans, Lat.] Motionless; still; not agitated; not flowing; not running.

What does the flood from putrefaction keep?
Should it be stagnant in its ample east,
The fun would through it spread destructive heat.

'Twas owing to this hurry and action of the water, that the sand now was cast into layers, and put to a regular settlement, from a water quiet and stagnant.

Immur'd and buried in perpetual sloth,
That gloomy slumber of the stagnant soul.
STAGNATE. v. n. [Stagnum, Lat.] To lie motionless; to have no course or stream.

The water which now arises must have all stagnated at the surface, and could never possibly have been refunded forth upon the earth, had not the strata been thus raised up.
The ancient moving through the capillary tubes of the pores, and unites itself to the vessel through which it flows.

Where creeping waters ooze,
Where marshes stagnate.
STAGNATION. n. f. [from stagnate.] Stop of course; cessation of motion. It is often applied figuratively to moral or civil images.

As the Alps surround Geneva on all sides, they form a stagnation, where the wind would be a constant flow of vapours, did not the north wind tear it from time to time.

To what great ends turbulent is the wind!
To what, where in this active vapour lies,
To what, the clouds, and agitates the skies,
To what, from stagnation and corruption takes
To what, the ocean's ever-rolling waves.

STAGNANT. part. adj. [from stagnare.] Sober; grave; regular; composed; not wild; not volatile.

Put thyself
In a humour of less fear, ere wildness
Vaguely my staidest fancies.

This seems to our weaker view,
Or cloud with black fluid wisdom's hue.
I could not be a persuader to them of studying
In the spring, after three years that they Have well laid their grounds, but to ride out, with Prudent and staid guides, to all the quarters of the world.

In the more at ease in Sir Roger's family, because of the more of sober and staid persons.

STAGNANT. n. f. [from stagnant.] Sobriety; gravity; regularity; contrariety to wildness.

To bring blood of youth, fiercely agitating the
The staidness that is every and fixed staidness
The necessary to to leave an intention.

It sometimes he appears too gay, yet a secret
The staidness of youth accompanies his writings,
The staidness and sobriety of age he want.

STAGNANT. v. a. [stagnare, Welsh, from ys
at a stagnum.

Rhag Gwyar or Gwawd,
At a stagnum. Talaffyn, an old British poet.]

To stop; to spot; to maculate.

I find me a looking-glass;
I find her breath will mix or stain the flower,
Why then the lives.

From the gash a stream
His arrow flow'd, ere while to bright.

Thence again, my fons: be foes no more,
Nor man your country with your children's gore.

To die; to tinge.

To disgrace; to spot with guilt or infamy.

Of honour void, of innocence, of faith, of purity,
Our wonted ornaments now fail'd and stain'd.

STAIN. n. f. [from the verb.] 1. Blot; spot; discoloration.

We nowhere meet with a more pleasing flow than what appears in the heavens at the rising and setting of the sun, which is wholly made up of those different flames of light that flow themselves in clouds of a different situation.

And pikes, the tyrants of the watery plains.
2. Taint of guilt or infamy.

Nor death itself can wholly wash them stains,
But long contracts of guilt even in the soul remains.
The reliques of iniquity vice they wear.

And to be at last
To be at last actions of civility and justice, than futile ornaments are a beauty are they only in religion a stain?

Our opinion, concerning the force and virtue which such places have, is, I trust, without any blemish or stain of heresy.

Then heaven and earth, renew'd, shall be made pure.

To Emily, that shall receive no stain.
Ulysses' boots has been to a stain, for it he had made the choice himself, they whom he had rejected might have judg'd it a stain upon them for want of merit.

3. Cause of reproach; shame.

Henceby I will lead her that is the praise, and yet the stain, at all womanhood.

STAIN. n. f. [from stain.] One who stains; one who blots, one that dies, a dier.

STAINLESS. adj. [from stain.] 1. Free from blots or spots. Not in use.

The phoenix wings are not to one
For faultless length and faultless line.

2. Free from sin or reproach.

Yet I suppose him virtuous, know him noble,
Of great estate, of freck and faultless youth.

STAIR. n. f. [from stiegen, Saxon; stige, Dutch.] Steps by which we ascend from the lower part of a building to the upper.

Stair was anciently used for the whole order of steps; but stair now, if it be used at all, signifies, as in Milton, only one flight of steps.

A good ladder to a high tower will not make his stair upright, but winding about it will compels about, that the steps be the more convenient.

How many cowards, whose hearts are all asalle
As flax of bond, wear yet upon their chins
The beards of Hercules and strong Mars!

Slaver with hips as common as the stairs
That mount the capital.

I would have one only goodly room above stairs,
of some forty foot high.

St. James' Church repairing to the tower by night, attended by two servants, stood at the door, and found the two villains in the quarters.

The stairs were such as were in the old time of a stair and descending.

Satan rises on the lower stair,
That lead'd by steps of gold to heaven's gate,
Locks down with wonder at the sudden view
Of all this world.

Flourishing he frames,
As terror had increas'd his feet with wings;
Nor fear of his stairs, but down the depth he threw
His body; on his back the door he drew.

STAIRCASE. n. f. [stair and case.] The part of a fabric that contains the stairs.

To make a complete staircase is a curious piece of architecture.

I cannot forbear mentioning a staircase, where the richness of the ascent, the disposition of the lights, and the convenient landing, are admirably contrived.

STAKE. n. f. [staca, Saxon; stacck, Dutch;
staca, Spanish.]

1. A post or strong stick fixed in the ground.
The more I shook the stake which he had planted in the ground of my heart, the deeper still it sunk into it.

His credit in the world might stand the post town in great stead, as hitherto their ministers foreign estimation hath been the best stake in their hedge.

He wanted pikes to set before his archers,
Imag'd whereof sharp stakes, pluck'd out of hedges, clared for it, he lay plainly that his kingdom laid again he put to the stake, and that he must fight for it.

Are not our liberties, our lives,
The laws, religion, and our wives,
Enough at once to be at stake?

For covenant and the cause is stake.
The honour of the nation hangs in a manner at stake to make good several discourses.

Of my crown thou to a stake canst not take,
That which I value more, my love's at stake.

Hath any of you a great interest at stake in a distant part of the world? Hath he ventur'd a good share of his fortune?

Every man in Cato's life's at stake.

7. The stake is a small anvil, which stands upon a small iron foot on the workbench, to receive as occasion offers; or else it hath a strong iron spike at the

4. To shrink; to winch.
What trick, what starting hole, canst thou find out, to hide thee from this open flame? Shakspeare.
With trial fire touch me his finger end;
Fire be chafed, the flame will back descend,
And turn him to no pain; but, if he start,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart. Shakspeare.
5. To deviate.

The lords and gentlemen take all the meanest sort upon themselves; for they are best able to bring them in, whenever any of them starts out. Spenser.
Th' old drudging sun from his long-bent way
Shall at thy voice start and misguide the day;
The jocund orbs shall break their measure'd pace,
And stubborn poles change their allotted place. Cowley.

I rank him with the prodigies of fame,
With things which start from nature's common rules,
With bearded infants, and with teeming mules. Creech.

Keep your soul to the work when ready to start aside, unless you will be a slave to every wild imagination. Watts.

6. To set out from the barrier at a race.
It seems to be rather a technical a quo than a true principle, as the starting post is none of the horse's legs. Boyle.

Should some god tell me, that I should be born
And try again, his offer I should scorn;
Alas! when I have ended well my race,
To be led back to my first starting place. Dunham.
When in the goal they start,
The youthful charioteers with heaving heart
Rush to the race. Dryden.

The clangor of the trumpet gives the sign,
At once the vanguard, advancing in a line. Dryden
7. To set out on any pursuit.
Fair courts of passion, where two lovers start
And run together, heart still yok'd with heart. Butler

People, when they have made themselves weary,
Get up their rest upon this very spot where they stood.
When two start into the world together, he that is thrown behind, unless his mind proves generous, will be displaced with the other. Collier.

To fight against me under Percy's pay. Shakspeare.
Several starts of fancy, oil-hand, look with enough; but bring them to the test, and there is nothing in 'em. L'Estrange.

Are they not only to disguise our passions,
To set our looks at variance with our thoughts,
To check the starts and fallies of the soul?
We were well enough pleased with this start of thought. Addison.

4. Sudden fit; intermitted action.
Methought her eyes had cross'd her tongue;
For the did speak in starts distractedly. Shakspeare.
Thy forms are flushed arts
Thy subtle ways be narrow straits,
Thy curtesy but sudden starts,
And what thou call'st thy guits are baits. Ben Jonson.

Nature does nothing by starts and leaps, or in a hurry, but all her motions are gradual.
An unambiguous expression, a little clew, or a start of passion, is not enough to take leave upon. Collier.

5. A quick spring or motion; a shoot; a push.
In things, the more they are wound up and framed, and thereby give a more quick start back, the more treble is the sound, and the flacker they are, or less wound up, the slower is the sound. Bacon.

Both cause the firing to give a quicker start.
How could water make those visible starts upon freezing, but by some subtle freezing principle which as suddenly shoots out? Gray.

6. First emission from the barrier; act of setting out.
You found like greyhounds in the ships, Straining upon the start. Shakspeare.

part of a ship.

Oranto's barque, ev'n in the hero's view,
From stem to stem by waves was overborn. Dryden.
To STEM. v. a. [Stemma, Islandick.] To oppose a current; to pass cross or forward notwithstanding the stream.

They on the trading flood,
Through the wide Ethiopian to the cape,
Ply, stemming nightly tow'rd the pole. Milton.
Above the deep they raise their scaly crests,
And stem the flood with their erected breasts. Denb.
In shipping such as this, the Irish kern
And untaught Indian on the stream did glide.
Ere sharp-keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn,
Or fish-like ours did spread from either side. Dryden.
At length Erasmus, that great unjust name,
Stemm'd the wild torrent of a barbarous age,
And drove those holy Vandals off the stage. Pope.

STENCH. n. s. [from stencan, Saxon.]

1. A stink; a bad smell.
Death, death, oh amiable and lovely death!
Thou odoriferous stench, found rottenness,
Arise forth from thy couch of lasting night. Shaksp.
So bees with smoke, and doves with noisome stench,
Are from their hives and houses driv'n away. Shaksp.
Physicians, by the stench of feathers, cure the rising of the mother. Bacon.
The ministry will be found the salt of the earth,
the thing that keeps societies of men from stench
and corruption. South.

The hourly Nar
Corrupted with the stench of sulphur flows,
And into Tiber's streamth' infected current throws.
Addison.

2. I find it used once for a good smell.
Black bulls and bearded goats on altars lie,
And clouds of stinky stench involve the sky. Dryden.
To STENCH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make to stink. Not proper, or in use.
The foulness of the ponds only stencheth the water.
Mortimer.

2. [for staunch, corruptly.] To stop; to hinder to flow.
They had better skill to let blood than stench it.
King Charles.

Refringents to stench, and ineffatives to thicken, the blood. Harvey.

STENOGRAPHY. n. s. [στενός and γραφω.]
Shorthand.

O the accurst stenography of state!
The princely eagle shrunk into a bat. Cleveland.
STENTOROPHONICK. adj. [from Stentor, the Homeric herald, whose voice was as loud as that of fifty men, and φωνή, a voice.] Loudly speaking or sounding.
Of this stentorophonick horn of Alexander there is a figure preserved in the Vatican. Derham.

To STEP. v. n. [strepian, Saxon; stappen,
Dutch.]

1. To move by a single change of the place of the foot.

One of our nation hath proceeded so far, that he was able, by the help of wings, in a running pace, to step constantly ten yods at a time. Wilkins.

2. To advance by a sudden progression.
Whoever first, after the troubling the water,
stepped in, was made whole. Joshua.

Buried his father, by whose death he's stepp'd into a great estate. Shakspeare.

3. To move mentally.
When a person is hearing a sermon, he may give his thoughts leave to step back so far as to recollect the several heads. Watts.

They are stepping almost three thousand years back into the remotest antiquity, the only true mirror of that ancient world. Pope.

4. To go; to walk.

I am in blood
stept in so far, that should I wade no more, Returning were as tedious as go o'er. Shakspeare.

5. To come as it were by chance.
The old poets step in to the assistance of the medalist. Addison.

6. To take a short walk.
See where he comes; so, please you, step aside
I'll know his grievance. Shakspeare.

My brothers, when they saw me wearied out,
Stepp'd, as they said, to the next thicket side
To bring me berries. Milton.

When your master wants a servant who happens to be abroad, answer, that he had but that minute stept out. Swift.

7. To walk gravely, slowly, or resolutely.
Pyrrhus, the most ancient of all the bathaws,
stept forth, and, appealing unto his mercies, earnestly requested him to spare his life. Knolles.

When you stepp'd forth, how did the monster rage,
In scorn of your soft looks and tender age! Cowley.

Home the swain retreats,
His flock before him stepping to the fold. Thomson.

STEP. n. s. [strep, Saxon; stap, Dutch.]

1. Progression by one removal of the foot.
Thou found and firm-set earth,
Hear not my steps, which way they walk. Shaksp.
Lang'ring perdition, worse than any death
Can be at once, shall step by step attend
You and your ways. Shakspeare.

Who was the first to explore th' untrodden path,
When life was hazarded in every step? Addison.

2. One remove in climbing; hold for the foot; a stair.

While Solyman lay at Buda, seven bloody heads of bishops slain in battle, were set in order upon a wooden step. Knolles.

The breadth of every single step or stair should be never less than one foot, nor more than eighteen inches. Wotton.

Those heights where William's virtue might have flourish'd,
And on the subject world look'd safely down,
By Marlborough's d'ne props and steps were made Sublimier yet to raise his queen's renown. Prior.

It was a saying among the ancients, Truth lies in a well; and, to carry on this metaphor, we may justly say, that logic does supply us with steps, whereby we may go down to reach the water. Watts.

3. Quantity of space passed or measured by one removal of the foot.

The gradus, a Roman measure, may be translated a step, or the half of a paces or pace. Arbuthnot.

4. A small length; a small space.
There is but a step between me and death.
1 Samuel.

5. [In the plural.] Walk; passage.
O may thy power, propitious still to me,
Conduct my steps to find the fatal tree
In this deep forest. Dryden.

6. Gradation; degree.
The same sin for substance hath sundry steps and degrees, in respect whereof one man becomes a more heinous offender than another. Perkins.

7. Progression; act of advancing.

To derive two or three general principles of motion from phenomena, and afterwards to tell us how the properties and actions of all corporeal things follow from those manifest principles, would be a very great step in philosophy, though the causes of these principles were not yet discovered. Newton.

One injury is best defended by a second, and thus by a third: by these steps the old masters of the palace in France became masters of the kingdom; and by these steps a general during pleasure might have grown into a general for life, and a general for life into a king. Swift.

The quest must not proceed too swiftly towards the determination of his point, that he may with more ease draw the learner to those principles step by step, from whence the final conclusion will arise.
Watts.

8. Footstep; print of the foot.
From hence Africa took her flight, and here
The prints of her departing steps appear. Dryden.

9. Gait; manner of walking.

Sudden from the golden throne
With a submissive step I basted down;
The glowing garland from my hair I took,
Love in my heart, obedience in my look. Prior.

10. Action; instance of conduct.
The reputation of a man depends upon the step steps he makes in the world. Pope.

STEP, in composition, signifies one who is related only by marriage. [strep, Sax.
from strepian, to deprive, or make an orphan: for the Saxons not only said a step-mother, but a step-daughter, or step-son;
to which it indeed, according to this etymology, more properly belongs but as it is now seldom applied but to the mother, it seems to mean, in the mind of those who use it, a woman who has stepped into the vacant place of the true mother.]

How should their minds chafe but misdoubt, let this discipline, which always you match with divine doctrine as her natural and true sister, be found in to all kinds of knowledge a step-mother? Hooker.

This wanton step-dame loved him the more;
But, when the faw her offer'd sweets refuse,
Her love she turn'd to hate. Spenser.

You shall not find me, daughter,
After the slander of most step-mothers,
Ill-eyed unto you. Shakspeare.

A father cruel, and a step-dame false, Shakspeare.
Cato, the elder, being aged, buried his wife, and married a young woman; his son came to him, and said, Sir, what have I offended, that you have brought a step-mother into your house? The old man answered, Nay, quite the contrary, son, thou pleasest me so well, as I would be glad to have more such. Bacon.

The name of step-dame, your practis'd art,
By which you have estrang'd my father's heart,
All you have done against me, or design,
Shows your aserious, but begets not mine. Dryden.

A step-dame too I have, a curld she,
Who rules my hen-peck'd fire, and orders me. Drum.

Any body would have guessed miss to have been a bred up under the influence of a cruel step-dame, and John to be the fondling of a tender mother. Arbuthnot.

STEPPINGSTONE. n. s. [step and stone.]
Stone laid to catch the foot, and save it from wet or dirt.

Lake steppingstones to save a slide,
In streets where kennels are too wide. Swift.

STERCORA'CEOUS. adj. [stercoraceus, Lat.] Belonging to dung; partaking of the nature of dung.

Green juicy vegetable in a heap together, and a heat equal to that of a human body; the sapid stercoraceous taste and odour, in taste is a putrid flesh, and in smell human feces. Abbot.

STERCORATION. n. s. [from stercora, Lat.]
The act of dunging; the act of manuring with dung.

The first help is stercoration: the sheep d is one of the best, and the next, dung of horses that of horses. P.

Stercoration is a fashable. P.

The exterior pulp of the fruit serves for the security of the seed, which hangs the plant, but, after it is fallen upon the for the stercoration of the soil, and promotes the growth, though not the first germination of the plant. P.

STEREOGRAPHY. n. s. [στερεός and γραφω.]
Stereographic, French.] The art of drawing the forms of solids upon a plane. Harris.

Stereometrie, French.] The art of measuring all sorts of solid bodies. Harris.

STERILE. adj. [sterile, French; sterilis, Latin.] Barren; unfruitful; not productive; wanting fecundity.

Our elders say,

The barren, touched in this holy chafe,
Shake off their steril curse. Shakespeare.

The sea marge steril, and rocky hard. Shaksp.
In very steril years, corn sown will grow to another kind. Bacon.

To separate seeds, put them in water: such as are corrupted and steril swim. Brown.

She is grown steril and barren, and her births of animals are now very inconsiderable. More.

When the vegetative stratum was once washed off by rains, the hills would have become barren, the strata below yielding only mere sterile and mineral matter, such as was inept for the formation of vegetables. Woodward.

STERILITY. n. f. [sterilité, French; sterilitas, from sterilis, Latin.] Barrenness; want of fecundity; unfruitfulness.

Spain is thus sown of people, by reason of the fertility of the soil, and because their natives are enslaved by to many employments in such vast territories. Bacon.

An eternal sterility must have possessed the world, were all things had been fastened everlastingly to the adamantine chains of specific gravity, if the Almighty had not said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit. Bentley.

He had more frequent occasion for repetition than any poet; yet one cannot ascribe this to any sterility of expression, but to the genius of his times, which delighted in their reiterated verses. Pope.

To STERILIZE. v. a. [from steril.] To make barren; to deprive of fecundity, or the power of production.

May we not as well suppose the sterilizing the earth was suspended for some time, till the deluge became the executioner of it? Woodward.

Go! sterilize the fertile with thy rage. Savage.

STERLING. adj. [Of this word many derivations have been offered; the most probable of which is that offered by Camden, who derives it from the Easterlings, who were employed as coiners.]

1. An epithet by which genuine English money is discriminated.

The king's treasure, that he left at his death, amounted unto eighteen hundred thousand pounds sterling. Bacon.

Several of them would rather chuse to count out a ton in fetterces than in pounds sterling. Addison.

2. Genuine; having passed the test.

There is not one single witty phrase in this collection, which hath not received the stamp and approbation of one hundred years; he may therefore be secure to find them all genuine, sterling, and authentic. Sayt.

STERLING. n. f. [sterlingum, low Latin, from the adjective.]

1. English coin; money.

This visionary various projects tries,
And knows that to be rich is to be wise;
By useful observation he can tell
The sacred chariot that in true sterling dwell;
How gold makes a patrician of a slave,
A dwarf an Atlas, a Thersites a brave. South.

Great name! which in our rolls records a band,
Leads honours, and protects the learned bands,
Accept this offering to thy bounty due,
And Roman wealth in English sterling view. C. Arbuthnot.

2. Standard rate.

STERN. adj. [steynn, Saxon.]

1. Severe of countenance; truculent of aspect.

Why look you still so stern and tragical. Shaksp.
I would outlast the sternest eyes that look,
Grieve the heart most daring on the earth,
Pick the young sucking cubs from the she-bear,
Yes, mock the lion when he roars for prey,
To win thee, lady. Shakespeare.

It shall not be amiss here to present the stern but lively countenance of this so famous a man. Knolles.

Gods and men
Fear'd her stern frown, and she was queen o' the woods. Milton.

The judge supreme soon cast a stedfast eye,
Stern, yet temper'd with benignity. Harte.

2. Severe of manners; harsh; unrelenting; cruel.

Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;
Thou, stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless. Shakespeare.

The common executioner,
Whose heart th' accustomed sight of death makes hard,

Falls not the ax upon the humbled neck
But first begs pardon: will you sterner be Than he that deals and lives by bloody drops? Shakespeare.

Did this in Cæsar seem ambitious?
When that the poor have cried, Cæsar hath wept;
Ambition should be made of sterner stuff. Shaksp.

Then shall the war, and stern debate, and strife
Immortal, be the business of my life;
And in thy fame, the dusty spoils among,
High on the burnish'd roof my banner shall be hung. Dryden.

How, stern as tutors, and as uncles hard,
We left the pupil, and defraud the ward. Dryden.

3. Hard; afflictive.

It wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,
Thou shouldst have said, Go, porter, turn the key,
All cruels else forbidd. Shakespeare.

Mischance flood,
And with his stern Steele drew in streamers the blood. Chapman.

STERN. n. f. [steyrn, Saxon; of the same original with steele.]

1. The hind part of the ship where the rudder is placed.

Let a barbarous Indian, who had never seen a ship, view the separate and disjointed parts, as the prow and stern, the ribs, masts, ropes, and shrouds, he would form but a very lame idea of it. Harris.

They turn their heads to sea, their sterns to land. Dryden.

2. Part of management; direction.

The king from stern I intend to tend,
And sit at chieftest stern of publick weal. Shaksp.

Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy,
And leave your England as dead midnight till. Shakespeare.

STERNLY. adv. [from stern.] In a stern manner; severely; truculently.

No mountain lion tore
Two lambs to sternly. Chapman.

Sternly he pronounced
The rigid interdiction. Milton.

Yet furr thou art not, nor thy face, the same,
Nor thy limbs moulded in so soft a frame;
Thou lookst more sternly, dost more strongly move,
And more of awe thou bear'st, and less of love. Dry.

STERNNESS. n. f. [from stern.]

1. Severity of look.

Of stature huge, and eke of courage bold,
That lions of men amaz'd their sternness do behold. Spenser.

How would he look, to see his work so noble Wildly bound up! or how Should I, in these my borrow'd haunts, behold
The sternness of his presence? Shakespeare.

2. Severity or harshness of manners.

I have sternness in my soul enough
To hear of soldiers work. Dryden.

STERNON. n. f. [steyrn.] The breastbone.

A soldier was shot in the breast through the sternon. Wifeman.

STERNUTATION. n. f. [sternutatio, Lat.]

The act of sneezing.

Sternutation is a convulsive flaking of the nerves and muscles, occasioned by an irritation of those in the nostrils. Quincy.

Concerning sternutation, or sneezing, and the custom of saluting upon that motion, it is generally believed to derive its original from a disease wherein sternutation proved mortal, and such as sneezed died. Brown.

STERNUTATIVE. adj. [sternutatif, Fr. from sternuto, Lat.] Having the quality of provoking to sneeze.

STERNUTATORY. n. f. [sternutatoire, Fr. from sternuto, Lat.] Medicine that provokes to sneeze.

1. A bagnio; a hothouse.

As burning stews from his boiling stew
Doth belch out flames, and rocks in pieces brake,
And rugged ribs of mountains molten new,
Enwrapt in coal-black clouds and filthy smoke. Spenser.

The Lydians were inhibited by Cæsar to use any armour, and give themselves to baths and stews. Abbot.

2. A brothel; a house of prostitution.

[This signification is by some imputed to this, that there were licensed brothels near the stews or fishponds in Southwark; but probably stew, like bagnio, took its had signification from bad use. It may be doubted whether it has any singular. South uses it in a plural termination with a singular tense. Shakespeare makes it singular.]

There be that hate harlots, and never were at the stew, that abhor falsehood, and never brake promise. Acham.

I have seen corruption boil and bubble,
Till it o'er-run the stew. Shakespeare.

With them there are no stews, no dilute houses, no courtesans. Bacon.

Her, though sev'n years she in the stews had had,
A nursery dust receive and think a maid;
And, though in childbirth's labour she did lie,
Midwives would swear twere but a tympany. Donne.

What moderate top would take the park or stews,
Who among troops of saulets my nymph can choose? Pop. ommen.

STEWARDE. n. f. [steyward, Saxon.]

1. One who manages the affairs of another.

There sat, yeld in red
Down to the ground, a comely personage,
That in his hand a white rod managed;
He steward was, high diet, ripe of age,
And in demeanour sober, and in council sage. Spenser.

Whilst I have gold, I'll be his steward still. Shakespeare.

Take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land;
Not as protector, steward, substitute,
Or lowly factor for another's gain. Shakespeare
How is it that I hear this of thee? Give an account of thy stewardship, for thou thyself be no longer steward. Luke

Improve all those talents the providence of God hath intrusted us with, because we are but stewards, and must give an account of them. Nelson

When a steward defrauds his lord, he must contrive at the rest of the servants while they are following the same practice. Suif

What can be a greater honour than to be chosen one of the stewards and dispensers of God's bounty to mankind? What can give a generous spirit more complacency, than to consider that great numbers owe to him, under God, their subsistence, and the good conduct of their lives. Suif

Just steward of the bounty he receiv'd,
And dying poorer than the poor relief'd. Harte

2. An officer of state.

Some strike from flashing flints their fiery seed,
Some gather sticks the kindled flames to feed. Dryden

2. Many instruments long and slender are called sticks.

To STICK. v. a. preterit stuck; participle past, stuck. [stican, Saxon.] To fasten on so as that it may adhere.

Two troops in fair array one moment shew'd;
The next, a fight with fallen bodies throw'd:
The points of spears are stuck within the shield,
The steeds without their riders from the field,
The knights unhors'd. Dryden

Would our ladies, instead of sticking on a patch against their country, sacrifice their necklaces against the common enemy, what devices ought not to be made in their favour? Addison

Oh for some potent stick,
Some gentle stems to bind the land again;
To stick the desert's chair unto the throne,
Give law to words, or war with words alone. Pope

To STICK. v. n.

1. To adhere; to unite itself by its tenacity or penetrating power.

I will caulk the ship on thy rivers to stick unto thy fears. Re

A stingy narrow-hearted fellow, that had a deal of choice fruit, had not the heart to touch it till it began to be rotten. L'Estrange.

He relates it only by parcels, and won't give us the whole, which forces me to bespeak his friends to engage him to lay aside that stingy humour, and gratify the publick at once. Arbuthnot.

TO STINK. v. n. preterit stunk or stank.

[stiman, Saxon; stinken, Dutch.] To emit an offensive smell, commonly a smell of putrefaction.

John, it will be stinking law for his breath. Shakespeare.

When the children of Ammon saw that they stank before David, they sent and hired Syrians. 2 Samuel.

What a fool art thou, to leave thy mother for a nasty stinking goat! L'Estrange.

Molt of smells want names; sweet and stinking serve our turn for these ideas, which is little more than to call them pleasing and displeasing. Locke.

Chloris, this costly way to stink give o'er,
'Tis throwing sweet into a common shore;
Not all Arabia would sufficient be;
Thou smell'st not of thy sweets, they stink of thee. Granville.

STINK. n. f. [from the verb.] Offensive smell.

Those stinks which the nostrils straight abhor are not most pernicious; but such airs as have some similitude with man's body, and so betray the spirits. Bacon.

They share a sin; and such proportions fall,
That, like a stink, 'tis nothing to them all. Dryden.

By what criterion do ye eat, d'ye think,
If this is priz'd for sweetness, that for stink? Pope.

STINKARD. n. f. [from stink.] A mean stinking paltry fellow.

STINKER. n. f. [from stink.] Something intended to offend by the smell.

The air may be purified by burning of stinkpots or stinkers in contagious lanes. Harvey.

STINKINGLY. adv. [from stinking.] With a stink.

Caust thou believe thy living is a life
So stinkingly depending? Shakespeare.

STINKPOT. n. f. [from stink and pot.] An artificial composition offensive to the smell.

The air may be purified by fires of pitch barrels, especially in close places, by burning of stinkpots. Harvey.

TO STINT. v. a. [stynta, Swedish; stunta, Islandick.] To bound; to limit; to confine; to restrain; to stop.

The reason hereof is the end which he hath proposed, and the law whereby his wisdom hath stinted the effects of his power in such sort, that it doth not work infinitely, but correspondently, unto that end for which it worketh. Hooker.

Then hopeless, heartless, gan the cunning thief Persuade us die, to stint all further strife. Spenser.

Nature wisely stints our appetite,
And craves no more than unadulter'd delight. Dryden.

I shall not go about to extenuate the latitude of the curse upon the earth, or stint it only to the production of weeds; but give it its full scope, in an universal diminution of the fruitfulness of the earth. Woodward.

A supposed heathen deity might be so poor in his attributes, so stunted in his knowledge, that a pagan might hope to conceal his perjury from his notice. Addison.

Few countries which, if well cultivated, would not support double their inhabitants; and yet fewer where one third are not extremely stunted in necessities. Suif.

She stints them in their meals, and is very scrupulous of what they eat and drink, and tells them how many fine shapes the hot food spoiled in her time for want of such care. Law.

STINT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Limit; bound; restraint.

We must come at the length to some pause: for if every thing were to be desired for some other without any stint, there could be no certain end proposed unto our actions; we should go on we know not whither. Hooker.

The exteriors of mourning, a decent funeral, and black habits, are the usual stints of common husbands. Dryden.

2. A proportion; a quantity assigned.

Touching the stints or measure thereof, rites and ceremonies, and other external things of the like nature, being burtful unto the church, either in respect of their quality, or in regard of their number; in the former there could be no doubt or difficulty what would be done; their deliberation in the latter was more difficult. Hooker.

Our stint of woo
Is common; every day a sailor's wife,
The masters of some merchant, and the merchant,
Have just our theme of woo. Shakespeare.

He that gave the hint
This letter for to print,
Must also pay the stint. Denham.

How much wine drink you in a day? my stint in company is a pint at noon. Swift.

STIPEND. n. f. [stipendium, Latin.]

Wages; settled pay.
All the earth
Her kings and tetrarchs, are their tributaries;
People and nations pay them hourly stipends. Ben Jonson.

'St. Paul's seal was expressed in preaching without any offerings or stipend. Taylor.

STIPENDIARY. adj. [stipendiarius, Lat.]

Receiving salaries; performing any service for a stated price.

His great stipendiary prelates came with troops of evil appointed horsemen not half full. Knolles.

STIPENDIARY. n. f. [stipendiaire, Fr. stipendiarius, Lat.] One who performs any service for a settled payment.

This whole country is called the kingdom of Tunis; the king whereof is a kind of stipendiary unto the Turk. Abbot.

If thou art become
A tyrant's vile stipendiary, with grief
That valour thus triumphant I behold,
Which after all its danger and brave toil,
Deserves no honour from the gods or men. Glover.

STIPITIC. See STYPTIC.

TO STIPULATE. v. n. [stipulator, Lat. stipuler, Fr.] To contract; to bargain; to settle terms.

The Romans very much neglected their maritime affairs; for they stipulated with the Carthaginians to furnish them with ships for transport and war. Arbuthnot.

STIPULATION. n. f. [stipulation, Fr. stipulatio, Lat.] Bargain.

We promise obediently to keep all God's commandments; the hopes given by the gospel depend on our performance of that stipulation. Bogers.

STIPULATOR. n. f. One who contracts or bargains.

TO STIR. v. a. [stipian, Saxon; stoorren, Dutch.]

1. To move; to remove from its place.

My foot I had never yet in five days been able to stir, but it was lifted. Temple.

Other spirits
Shoot through their tracks, and distant masters stir:
This sovereign, by his arbitrary nod,
Refrains or sends his ministers abroad;
Swift and obedient to his high command,
They stir a finger, or they lift a hand. Blackmore.

2. To agitate; to bring into debate.
Preserve the right of thy place, but stir not 4 T

questions of jurisdiction; and rather assume thy right in silence than voice it with claims. Bacon.

One judgment in parliament, that cases of that nature ought to be determined according to the common law, is of greater weight than many cases to the contrary, wherein the question was not stirred; yea, even though it should be stirred, and the contrary affirmed. Hale.

3. To incite; to instigate; to animate.

With him is come the mother queen;
An At stirring him to blood and strife. Shakespeare.

If you stir these daughters hearts
Against their father, fool me not so much
To bear it tamely. Shakespeare.

Nestor next beheld
The subtle Pylian orator range up and down the field, Embellishing his men at armes, and stirring all to blows. Chapman.

4. To raise; to excite.

The soldiers love her brother's memory,
And for her sake some mutiny will stir. Dryden.

5. To STIR up. To incite; to animate; to instigate by inflaming the passions.

This would form a dangerous commission, and ready to stir up all the Irish in rebellion. Spencer.

The greedy thirst of royal crown,
That knows no kindred, no regards, no right,
Stir'd Porrex up to put his brother down. Spencer.
The words of Judas were very good, and able to stir them up to valour. 2 Maccabees.

Having overcome and thrust him out of his kingdom,
he stir'd up the christians and Numidians against him. Knolles.

The vigorous spirit of Montrose stir'd him up to make some attempt, whether he had any help or no. Clarendon.

The improving of his own parts and happiness
stir him up to so notable, a design.

Thou with rebel influence didst dare
To own and to protect that honny rustian,
To stir the fuchous rabble up to arms. Rowe.

6. To STIR up. To put in action; to excite; to quicken.

Hell is moved for thee, to meet thee at thy coming;
it stirreth up the dead for thee. Isaiah.
Such mirth the jocund flute or gamelone pipe
stirs up among the loose unletter'd hinds. Milton.
To stir up vigour in him, employ him in some constant bodily labour. Locke.

The use of the passions is to stir up the mind and put it upon action, to awake the understanding, and to enforce the will. Addison.
To STIR, v. n.

1. To move one's self; to go out of the place; to change place.

No power he had to stir, nor will to rife.

They had the semblance of great bodies behind, on the other side of the hull; the falsehood of which would have been manifest as soon as they should move from the place where they were, and from whence they were not to stir. Clarendon.

We acknowledge a man to be mad or melancholy, who fancies himself to be glads, and so is afraid of stirring, or, taking himself to be waz, dares not let the sun shine upon him. Law.

2. To be in motion; not to be still; to pass from inactivity to motion.

The great Judge of all knows every different degree of human improvement, from these weak stirrings and tendencies of the will, which have not yet formed themselves into regular purposes, to the last entire consummation of a good habit. Speculator.

3. To become the object of notice.

If they happen to have any superior character, they fancy they have a right to talk freely upon every thing that stirs or appears. Watts.

4. To rise in the morning. This is a colloquial and familiar use.

If the gentlewoman that attends the general's wife be stirring, tell her there's one Callio outcraze of her a little favour of speech. Shakespeare.

STIR, n. f. [stir, Runick, a battle;
stirf, noise, Welsh.]

a. Tumult; bustle.

What hallooing and what stir is this to day?

These are my mates, that make their wills their law.

Have some unhappy passenger in chace. Shakspeare.

Tumultuous stirs upon this strife ensue. Drayton.

He hath spun a fair thread, to make all this stir
for such a necessity as no man ever denied.

Bishop Bramhall.

Tell, said the soldier, miserable stir,
Why all these words, this clamour, and this stir?
Why do disputes in wrangling spend the day?

Denham.

The great stirs of the disputing world are but the conflicts of the humours. Glennville.

After all this stir about them, they are good for nothing. Tillotson.

Consider, after so much stir about genus and species, how few words we have yet settled definitions of.

Locke.

Silence is usually worse than the fiercest and loudest accusations; since it proceeds from a kind of numbness or stupidity of conscience, and an absolute dominion obtained by sin over the soul, so that it shall not to much as dare to complain or make a stir. South.

2. Commotion; public disturbance; tumultuous disorder; seditious uproar.

Whensoever the earl shall die, all those lands are to come unto her majesty; he is like to make a stir there, though of himself of no power, yet through supplantation of some others who lie in the wind. Spencer.

He did make these stirs, grieving that the name of Christ was at all brought into those parts. Abbot.
Being advertised of some stirs raised by his un-natural sons in England, he departed out of Ireland without a blow. DuRoi.

Raphael, thou hear'st what stir on earth
Satan, from hell 'scap'd through the dark some gulf,
Hath rais'd in Paradise, and how disturb'd
This night the human pair. Milton.

3. Agitation of thoughts; conflicting passion.

He did keep

The deck, with glove, or hat, or handkerchief
Still waving, as the stirs and fits of 's mind
Could best express how flow his soul sail'd on,
How swift his ship. Shakspeare.

STIR, n. f. [stir, Lat.] Resembling ice.

Chrysalis is found sometimes in rocks, and in some places not much unlike the stirious or stolid dependencies of ice. Brown.

STIRP, n. f. [stirps, Lat.] Race; family; generation. Not used.

Sundry nations got footing in that land, of the which there yet remain divers great families and stirps. Spencer.

Democracies are less subject to sedition than when there are stirps of nobles. Bacon.

All nations of might and fame resorted hither;
of whom we have some stirps and little tribes with us at this day. Bacon.

STIR, n. f. [stir, Lat.]

1. One who is in motion; one who puts in motion.

2. A riser in the morning.
Come on; give me your hand, stir; an early
stirrer. Shakspeare.

3. An inciter; an instigator.

4. STIR up. An inciter; an instigator.
A perpetual spring, not found elsewhere but in the Indies only, by reason of the sun's neighbourhood, the life and stir up of nature in a perpetual activity.

Will it not reflect on thy character, Nic, to turn barterer in thy old days; a stirrer up of quarrels betwixt thy neighbours? Arbutnot.

STIR, n. f. [stir, Saxon, stirap; from stir, Saxon, to climb, and nap, a cord.] An iron hoop suspended by a strap, in which the horseman sets his foot when he mounts or rides.

Neither is his manner of mounting unseemly, though he lack stirups; for in his getting up, his horse is still going, whereby he gaineth way: and therefore the stirrup was called so in Saxon, as it were, a day to get up; being derived of the old English word stir, which is to get up, or mount.

Hast thou not kiss'd my hand, and held my stirrup? Shakspeare.

His horse shipped with an old motley saddle, the stirrup of no kindred. Shakspeare.

My friend, judge not me,
Thou seest I judge not thee.

Between the stirrup and the ground,
Mercy I ask'd, mercy I found. Camden.

At this the knight began to cheer up,
And raising up himself on stirrup,

Cried out, Victoria. Hudibras.

1. A pass of the needle and thread through any thing.

2. [from stician, Saxon.] A sharp lance nating pain.

If you desire the spleen, and will laugh yourself into stitches, follow me; yond gull Malvolio is turned heathen, a very renegade. Shakspeare.

A simple bloody sputation of the lungs is disferenced from a pleurisy, which is ever painful and attended with a stitch. Harvey.

3. A link of yarn in knitting.

There fell twenty stitches in his stocking.

Mattew.

4. In Chapman it seems to mean furrows or ridges.

Many men at plow he made, and drove east
here and there,

And turn'd up stitches orderly. Chapman.

5. In the following line, allusion is made to a knit stock.

A stitch-fall'n cheek, that hangs below the jaw,
Such wrinkles as a skilful hand would draw
For an old grandam ape. Dryden.

STITCHERY, n. f. [from stitch.] Needlework. In contempt.

Come lay aside your stitchery; play the idle housewife with me this afternoon. Shakspeare.

to work, which he faith is the life of a peasant; but thenceforth become an horse-boy or a stock to see him, inhering himself to his sword, and the gentlemanly trade of stealing. Spenser.

STOCCA'DO. n. f. [Staccato, from stocco, a rapier, Ital.] A thrust with the rapier.
You stand on distance, your passes, stoccados, and I know not what. Shakespeare.

STOCK. n. f. [stoc, Saxon; stock, Dut.
stoc, French.]

1. The trunk; the body of a plant.

That furious bear
His precious horn, fought of his enemies,
Sinks in the stock, ne thence can be releas'd.

There is hope of a tree, if cut down, that it will sprout again, though the root was old in the earth, and the stock die in the ground. Job.

2. The trunk into which a graft is inserted.
The cion over-rueth the stock quite; and the stock is passive only, and giveth alimant but no motion to the graft. Bacon.

As fruits ungrateful to the planter's care,
On savage stocks inserted, learn to bear;
The cion virtues thus from passion shoot,
Wild nature's vigour working at the root. Pope.

3. A log; a post.
That they kept thy truth so pure of old,
When all our fathers worshipp'd stocks and stones, Forget not. Milton.

Why all this fury? What's the matter,
That oaks must come from Thrace to dance?
Must stupid stocks be taught to flatter?
And is there no such wood in France? Prior.

4. A man proverbially stupid.
What tyranny is this, my heart to thrall,
And eke my tongue with proud restraint to tie,
That neither I may speak nor think at all,
But like a stupid stock in silence die? Spenser.

While we admire
This virtue and this moral discipline,
Let's be no stocks, nor no stocks. Shakespeare.

5. The handle of any thing.
6. A support of a ship while it is building.
Fresh supplies of ships,
And such as fitted since the fight had been,
Or new from stocks were fall'n into the road. Dryden.

7. [Stocco, a rapier, Italian.] A thrust; a stoccado.
To see thee here, to see thee there; to see thee pass by paneto, thy stock, thy reverse. Shakespeare.

8. Something made of linen; a cravat; a close neckcloth. Anciently a cover for the leg, now stocking.

His lackey with a linen stock on one leg, and a kersey boot hose on the other. Shakespeare.

9. A race; a lineage; a family.
Say what stock he springs of.—
—The noble house of Marcius. Shakespeare.

His early virtues to that ancient stock
Gave as much honour as from thence he took.
Waller.

The like shall sing
All prophecy, that of the royal stock
Of David, so I name this king, shall rise
A son, the woman's seed. Milton.

Thou hast seen one world begin and end,
And man, as from a second stock, proceed. Milton.

To no human stock
We owe this fierce unkindness; but the rock,
That cloven rock, produc'd thee. Waller.

Thy mother was no goddess, nor thy stock
From Dardanus; but in some horrid rock, Perfidious wretch, rough Caucasus thee bred. Jenham.

10. The principal; capital store; fund already provided.
Prodigal men
Feel not their own stock wasting. Ben Jonson.

Let the exportation of home commodities be more in value than the importation of foreign, so the stock of the kingdom shall yearly increase; for the balance of trade must be returned in money or bullion. Bacon.

A king, against a storm, must foresee to a convenient stock of treasure. Bacon.

'Tis the place where God promises and delights to dispense larger proportions of his favour, that he may fix a mark of honour on his sanctuary, and recommend it to the fons of men, upon the stock of their own interest as well as his own glory. South.

Some honour of your own acquire;
Add to that stock, which justly we bestow,
Of those blest shades to whom you all things owe. Dryden.

Yet was she not profuse, but fear'd to waste,
And wisely manag'd that the stock might last;
That all might be supplied, and she not grieve,
When crowds appear'd, she had not to relieve;
Which to prevent, the full increas'd her store;
Laid up, and fear'd, that she might give the more. Dryden.

Beneath one law bees live,
And with one common stock their traffick drive:
All is the state's, the state provides for all. Dryden.

Nor do those ills on single bodies prey;
But oftner bring the nation to decay,
And sweep the present stock and future hope away. Dryden.

If parents die without actually transferring their right to another, why does it not return to the common stock of mankind? Locke.

When we brought it out, it took such a quantity of air into its lungs, that it swelled almost twice as big as before; and it was perhaps on this stock of air that it lived a minute longer the second time. Addison.

Be ready to give, and glad to distribute, by setting apart something out of thy stock for the use of some charities. Atterbury.

Of those flurs, which our imperfect eye
Has doom'd and fix'd to one eternal fly,
Each, by a native stock of honour great,
May dart strong influence, and diffuse kind heat. Prior.

They had law-suits; but, though they spent their income, they never mortgag'd the stock. Arbuthnot.

She has divided part of her estate amongst them,
that every one may be charitable out of their own
stock, and each of them take it in their turns to provide for the poor and sick of the parish. Lowe.

11. Quantity; store; body.
He proposes to himself no small stock of fame in future ages, in being the first who has undertaken this design. Arbuthnot.

12. A fund established by the government, of which the value rises and falls by artifice or chance.
An artificial wealth of funds and stocks was in the hands of those who had been plundering the publick. Swift.

Statesman and patriot ply alike the stocks,
Peerefs and butler share alike the box. Pope.

To STOCK. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To store; to fill sufficiently.
If a man will commit such rules to his memory,
and stock his mind with portions of scripture answerable to all the heads of duty, his conscience can never be at a loss. South.

I, who before with shepherds in the groves
Sung to my oaten pipe their rural loves,
Manur'd the globe, and stock'd the fruitful plain. Dryden.

The world begun to be stock'd with people, and human industry drain'd those uninhabitable places. Burnet.

Springs and rivers are by large supplies continually stock'd with water. Woodward.

2. To lay up in store: as, he stocks what he cannot use.

3. To put in the stocks. See STOCKS.
Call not your stocks for me: I serve the king,
On whose employment I was sent to you;
You shall do small respect, shew too bold malice
Against the grace and person of my master, Stocking his messenger. Shakespeare.

4. To stock up. To extirpate.
The wild boar not only spoils her branches, but stocks up her roots. Decay of Piety.

STOCKDOVE. n. f. [palmbera.] Ringdove.

Stockdoves and turtles tell their am'rous pain,
And, from the lofty clus, of love complain. Dryden.

STOCKFISH. n. f. [stockvisch, Dutch.]

Dried cod, so called from its hardness.

STOCKGILLYFLOWER. n. f. [leucoium, Lat.] A plant. Mittler.

STOCKING. n. f. [The original word seems to be stock; whence stocks, a prison for the legs. Stock, in the old language, made the plural stocken, which was used for a pair of stocks or covers for the legs.

Stocken was in time taken for a singular, and pronounced stocking. The like corruption has happened to chick, chicken, chickens.] The covering of the leg.

In his first approach before my lady he will come to her in yellow stockings, and 'tis a colour she abhors. Shakespeare.

By the loyalty of that town he procured stocks,
stockings, and money for his soldiers. Clarendon.

Unless we should expect that nature should make jerkins and stockings grow out of the ground, what could she do better than afford us so fit materials for clothing as the wool of sheep? Morse.

He spent half a day to look for his odd stocking,
when he had them both upon a leg. Leffrange.

At am'rous Flavia is the stocking thrown;
That very night he long'd to lie alone. Pope.

STOMACH. n. f. [estomach, Fr. stomachus, Latin.]

1. The ventricle in which food is digested.

If you're sick at sea,
Or stomach qualn'd at land, a dram of this
Will drive away distemper. Shakespeare.

This filthy simile, this beastly line,
Quite turns my stomach. Pope.

2. Appetite; desire of food.

Tell me, what is 't that takes from thee
Thy stomach, pleasure, and thy golden sleep? Shakespeare.

Will fortune never come with both hands full,
But write her fair words still in foulest letters?
She either gives a stomach, and no food;
Such are the poor in health: or else a feast,
And takes away the stomach; such the rich,
That have abundance and enjoy it not. Shakespeare.

As appetite or stomach to meet is a sign of health in the body, so is this hunger in the soul a vital quality, an evidence of some life of grace in the heart;
whereas decay of appetite, and the no manner of stomach, is a most desperate prognostick. Hammond.

3. Inclination; liking.

He which hath no stomach to this fight,
Let him depart. Shakespeare.

The unusual distance of time made it subject to every man's note, that it was an act against his stomach, and put upon him by necessity of state. Bacon.

The very trade went against his stomach. L'Estrange.

4. [Stomachus, Lat.] Anger; violence of temper.

Disdain he called was, and did disdain
To be so call'd, and who fo did him call:

His portance terrible, and stature tall. Spenser.

Is 't near dinner time?—I would it were,
That you might kill your stomach on your meat,
And not upon your maid. Shakespeare.

Instead of trumpet and of drum,
That makes the warrior's stomach come. Butler.

5. Sullenness; resentment; stubbornness.

Some of the chiefest lady professed with greater stomach their judgments, that such a discipline was little better than popish tyranny disguised under a new form. Hooker.

They plainly saw, that when stomach doth strive with wit, the match is not equal. Hooker.

Whereby the ape in wondrous stomach wox,
Strongly encourag'd by the crafty fox. Spenser.

That nobles should such stomachs bear!
I myself fight not once in forty year. Shakespeare.

It stuck in the camel's stomach, that bulls should be armed with horns, and that a creature of his size should be left defenceless. L'Estrange.

Not courage, but stomach, that makes people brave rather than they will be. L'Estrange.

This sort of crying proceeding from pride, oblivion, and stomach, the will, where the fault lies,
must be beat. Locke.

6. Pride; haughtiness.

Arius, a subtle-witted and a marvellous fair-spoken man, was discontented that one should be placed before him in honour, whose superior he him; only Saul stomached him, and therefore hated him. Hull.

The lion began to show his teeth, and to stomach
the affront. L'Estrange.

To STOMACH. r. n. To be angry.

Let a man, though never so justly, oppose himself unto those that are disordered in their ways, and what one amongst them commonly doth not stomach at such contradiction, storm at reproach, and hate such as would reform them? Hooker.

STOMACHED. adj. [from stomach.] Filled with passions of resentment.

High stomach'd are they both, and full of ire;
In rage deaf as the sea, hasty as fire. Shakespeare.

STOMACHER. n. f. [from stomach.] An ornamental covering worn by women on the breast.

Golden quoifs and stomachers,
For my lads to give their dears. Shakespeare.

Instead of a stomacher, a girding of sackcloth. Izaak.

Thou marry'st every year
The lyric lark and the grave whispering dove,
The sparrow that neglects his life for love,
The household bird with the red stomacher. Donne.

STOMACHFUL. adj. [stomachofus, Latin; stomach and full.] Sullen; stubborn; perverse.

A stomachful boy, put to school, the whole world could not bring to pronounce the first letter. L'Estrange.

Obstinate or stomachful crying should not be permitted, because it is another way of encouraging those passions which 'tis our business to subdue. Locke.

STOMACHFULNESS. n. f. [from stomach-ful.] Stubbornness; sullenness; obstinacy.

Being without appetite.

STOMACHOUS. adj. [stomachofus, Latin.]
Stout; angry; sullen; obstinate. Obsolete.

That stranger knight in presence came,
And goodly salved them; but nought again
Him answered, as courtesy became;
But with stern looks, and stomachous disdain,
Gave signs of grudge and discontentment vain. Spenser.

STOND. n. f. [for stand.]

1. Post; station. Obsolete.

On th' other side, th' assieg'd castle's ward
Their steadfast stonds did mightily maintain. Spenser.

2. Stop; indisposition to proceed.

There be not stonds nor reliveness in a man's nature; but the wheels of his mind keep way with the wheels of his fortune. Bacon.

STONE. n. f. [stains, Gothick; stan, Sax. steen, Dutch.]

1. Stones are bodies insipid, hard, not dystile or malleable, nor soluble in water. Woodward.

Stones are, the softer and the harder. Of the softer stones are, 1. The foliaceous or flaky, as talk.

2. The stony, as the smooth. 3. The granulated, as the gypsum. Of the harder stones are, 1. The opaque stones, as flintstone. 2. The semi-transparent, as agate. 3. The pellucid, as crystal and the gem.

1. Made of stone.

Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shaksp.

With love's light wings did I o'erperch these walls;

For stony limits cannot hold love out. Shaksp.

Nor slept the winds
Within their stony caves, but rust'd abroad

From the four hinges of the world, and fell
On the vast wilderness, whose tallest pines,

Though rooted deep as high and sturdiest oaks,
Bow'd their stiff necks, loaden with stormy blasts,

Or torn up sheer. Milton.

Here the marshy grounds approach your fields,
And there the soil a stony harvest yields. Dryden.

As in spires he stood, he turn'd to stone;
The stony snake retain'd the figure still his own.

Dryden.

They suppose these bodies to be only water petrified, or converted into these sparry or stony icicles.

2. Abounding with stones.

Un capable of pity. Shaksp.

Eight yards of uneven ground is three score and ten miles a-foot with me, and the stony-hearted villains know it. Shaksp.

At this sight
My heart is turn'd to stone; and, while 'tis mine,
It shall be stony. Shaksp.

I will clear their senses dark,
What may suffice, and soften stony hearts,
To pray, repent, and bring obedience due. Milton.

Ludib'rance, clad in wisdom's guise,
All fortitude of mind supplies;
For how can stony bowels melt,
In those who never pity felt? Swift.

STOOD. The preterit of To stand.

Adam, at the news,
Heart-struck with chilling gripe of sorrow stood. Milton.

STOOL. n.f. [stolz, Gothick; stool, Sax.
stoel, Dutch.]

1. A seat without a back, so distinguished from a chair.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back. Watts.

Thou fearful fool,
Why takest not of the same fruit of gold?
Ne sittest down on that same silver stool,
To rest thy weary person in the shadow cold? Spenser.

Now which were wise, and which were fools?
Poor Alma sits between two stools;
The more she reads, the more perplex. Prior.

2. Evacuation by purgative medicines.

There be medicines that move stools, and not urine; some other urine, and not stools: those that purge by stool, are such as enter not at all, or little, into the mesenteric veins; but either at the first are not digestible by the stomach, and therefore move immediately downwards to the guts; or else are afterwards rejected by the mesenteric veins, and so turn likewise downwards to the guts. Bacon.

The peristaltick motion, or repeated changes of contraction and dilatation, is not in the lower guts, else one would have a continual need of going to stool. Arbuthnot.

3. STOOT of Repentance, or Cutty Stool, in the kirks of Scotland, is somewhat analogous to the pillory. It is elevated above the congregation. In some places there may be a seat in it; but it is generally without, and the person stands therein, who has been guilty of fornication, for three Sundays, in the forenoon;
and after sermon is called upon by name and surname, the beadle or kirk-officer bringing the offender, if refractory, forward to his post; and then the preacher proceeds to admonition. Here too are set to publick view adulterers; only these are habited in a coarse canvas, analogous to a hairy or monastick vest, with a hood to it, which they call the sack, or sackcloth; and that every Sunday throughout a year, or longer.

Unequal and unreasonable judgment of things, brings many a great man to the stool of repentance. L'Estrange.

STOOLBALL. n.f. [stool and ball.] A play where balls are driven from stool to stool.

While Betty dances on the green,
And Susan is at stoolball seen. Prior.

To STOOP. v.n. [stropian, Sax. stuppen,
Dutch.]

1. To bend down; to bend forward.

Like unto the boughs of this tree, he bended downward, and stooped toward the earth. Raleigh.

2. To lean forward standing or walking.

When Pelopidas and Lysimachus were sent to Artaxerxes, Pelopidas did nothing unworthy; but Lysimachus let fall his ring to the ground, and, stooping for that, was thought to make his adoration. Stillingfl.

He stooping open'd my left side, and took
From thence a rib. Milton.

3. To yield; to bend; to submit.

I am the son of Henry the fifth,
Who made the dauphin and the French to stoop. Shaksp.

Mighty in her ships stood Carthage long,
And swept the riches of the world from far;
Yet stoop'd to Rome, less wealthy, but more strong. Dryden.

4. To descend from rank or dignity.

Where men of great wealth stoop to husbandry,
it multiplieth riches exceedingly. Bacon.

He that condescended so far, and stooped so low, to invite and to bring us to heaven, will not refuse us a gracious reception there. Boyle.

5. To yield; to be inferior.

Death his death-wound shall then receive,
And stoop inglorious. Milton.

These are arts, my prince,
In which your Zama does not stoop to Rome. Addis.

6. To sink from resolution or superiority;
to condescend.

They, whose authority is required unto the satisfying of your demand, do think it both dangerous to admit such concurrence of divided minds; and un-meet that their laws, which, being once solemnly established, are to exact obedience of all men, and to constrain thereunto, should so far stoop as to hold themselves in suspense from taking any effect upon you, till some disputer can persuade you to be obedient. Hooker.

7. To come down on prey as a falcon.

The bird of Jove stoop'd from his airy tour,
Two birds of gayest plume before him drove. Mit.

8. To alight from the wing.

Satan ready now
To stoop with wearied wings and willing feet,
On the bare outside of this world. Milton.

Twelve swans behold in beauteous order move,
And stoop with closing pinions from above. Dryden.

9. To sink to a lower place.

Cowering low
With blandishment, each bird stoop'd on his wing. Milton.

STOOP. n.f. [from the verb.]

1. Act of stooping; inclination downward.

2. Descent from dignity or superiority.

Can any loyal subject see
With patience such a stoop from sovereignty?
An ocean pour'd upon a narrow brook? Dryden.

3. Fall of a bird upon his prey.

Now will I wander through the air,
Mount, make a stoop at every fair. Waller.

An eagle made a stoop at him in the middle of his exaltation, and carried him away. L'Estrange.

4. [stoppa, Sax. stoope, Dutch.] A vessel of liquor.

Come, lieutenant, I have a stoop of wine; and here without are a brace of gallants, that would fain have a measure to the health of Othello. Shaksp.

There is nothing more in me, sir, but may be squeezed out without racking, only a stoop or two of wine. Deham.

A caldron of fat beef, and stoop of ale,
On the huzzing mob shall more prevail,
Than if you give them, with the nicest art,
Regouls of peacocks brains, or silbert tart. King.

STOOPINGLY. adv. [from stooping.] With inclination downward.

Nani was noted to tread softly, to walk stoop-ingly, and raise himself from benches with laborious gesture. Wotton.

To STOP. v.a. [stopper, French; stoppare, Italian; stoppen, Dutch.]

1. To hinder from progressive motion.

From the oracle
They will bring all; whose spiritual counsel lead
Shall stop or spare me. Shakespeare.

2. To hinder from successive operation.

Can any dress and a way
To stop the approaches of decay,
And mend a ruin'd face? Dorset.

3. To hinder from any change of state, whether to better or worse.

4. To hinder from action or practice.
Friend, 'tis the duke's pleasure,
Whose disposition all the world well knows,
Will not be rubb'd nor stopp'd. Shakespeare.

As the truth of Christ is in me, no man shall stop me of this boasting. 2 Corinthians.

5. To put an end to the motion or action of any thing; to intercept.

Almost tall,
Pierc'd with an arrow from the distant war:
Fix'd in his throat the flying weapon stood.
And stopp'd his breath, and drank his vital blood. Dryden.

6. To repress; to suspend.

Every bold sinner, when about to engage in the commission of any known sin, should arrest his conscience, and stop the execution of his purpose with this question: Do I believe that God has denounced death to such a practice, or do I not? South.

7. To suppress.

He, on occasion of stopping my play, did me a good office at court, by representing it as long ago designed. Dryden.

8. To regulate musical strings with the fingers.

In instruments of strings, if you stop a string high, whereby it hath less scope to tremble, the sound is more treble, but yet more dead. Bacon.

9. To close an aperture.

Smite every fenced city, stop all wells of water, and mar land with stones. 2 Kings.

They pulled away the shoulder, and stopp'd their ears, that they should not hear. Zech.

A hawk's bell, the hule stopp'd up, hung by a thread within a bottle-glass, and stop the glass close with wax. Bacon.

His majesty stopp'd a leak that did much harm.
Bacon.

Stoppings and suffocations are dangerous in the body. Bacon.

They first rais'd an army with this design,
to stop my mouth, or force my content. King Charles.

Celsus gives a precept about bleeding, that when the blood is good, which is to be judg'd by the colour, that immediately the vein should be stopp'd.
Arbuthnot.

10. To obstruct; to encumber.

Mountains of ice that stop the imagin'd way.
Milton.

11. To garnish with proper punctuation.

To STOP. v. n.

1. To cease to go forward.

Some strange commotion
Is in his brain: he bites his lip, and starts;
Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then lays his finger on his temple; straight
Springs out into full gait, then stops again. Shaks.

When men pursue their thoughts of space, they stop at the confines of body, as if space were there at an end. Locke.

If the rude throng pour on with furious pace,
And hap to break thee from a friend's embrace,
Stop short, nor struggle through. Gay.

2. To cease from any course of action.

Encroachments are made by degrees from one step to another; and the best time to stop is at the beginning. Lesley.

STOP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Cessation of progressive motion.

Thought's the slave of time, and life time's fool;
And time, that takes survey of all the world,
Must have a stop. Shakespeare.

The margold, whose courtier's face
Echoes the sun, and doth unlase
Her at his rise, at his full stop Picks and shuts up her gaudy shop. Cleveland.

A lion, ranging for his prey, made a stop on a sudden, at a hideous yelling noise which startled him. L'Estrange.

2. Hindrance of progress; obstruction; act of stopping.

In weak and tender minds we little know what misery this strict opinion would breed, besides the stops it would make in the whole course of all men's lives and actions. Hooker.

These gates are not sufficient for the communication between the walled city and its suburbs, as daily appears by the stops and embarrasses of coaches near both these gates. Graunt.

My praise the Fabii claim,
And thou, great hero, greatest of thy name,
Orlain'd in war to save the sinking state,
And, by delays, to put a stop to fate. Dryden.

Occult qualities put a stop to the improvement of natural philosophy, and therefore have been rejected. Newton.

Brokers hinder trade, by making the circuit which the money goes larger, and in that circuit more stops, so that the return must necessarily be slower and fainter. Locke.

Female zeal, though proceeding from so good a principle, if we may believe the French historians, often put a stop to the proceedings of their kings,
which might have ended in a reformation. Addison.

3. Repression; hindrance of operation.

'Tis a great step towards the mastery of our desires, to give this stop to them, and shut them up in silence. Locke.

4. Cessation of action.

Look you to the guard to-night:
Let's teach ourselves that honourable stop,
Not to outstrip discretion. Shakespeare.

5. Interruption.

Thou art full of love and honesty,
And weigh'st thy words before thou giv'st them breath;
Therefore these stops of thine fright me the more. Shakespeare.

6. Prohibition of sale.

If they should open a war, they foresee the consumption France must fall into by the stop of their wine and salts, wholly taken off by our two nations. Temple.

7. That which obstructs; obstacle; impediment.

The proud Dueña, full of wrathful spight
And fierce disdain to be affronted so, Inforc'd her purple beast with all her might,
That stop out of the way to overthrow. Spenser.

On indeed they went: but O! not far;
A fatal stop travers'd their headlong course. Daniel.

Blessed be that God who cast ruins, stops, and hindrances in my way, when I was attempting the commission of such a sin. South.

8. Instrument by which the sounds of wind music are regulated.

You would play upon me, you would seem to know my stops; you would pluck out the heart of my mystery. Shakespeare.

Blest are those,
Whose blood and judgment are so well commingled,
That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger
To sound what stop she please. Shakespeare.

The harp
Had work, and rested not; the solemn pipe,
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop. Milton.

The sound
Of instruments, that made melodious chime,
Was heard of harp and organ; and who mov'd
Their stops, and chords, was seen; his volent touch Instinct through all proportions, low and high,
Fled, and pursued transverse the resonant fugue. Milton.

A variety of strings may be observed on their harps, and of stops on their tibias; which shews the little foundation that such writers have gone upon, who, from a short passage in a classic author, have determined the precise shape of the ancient musical instruments, with the exact number of their pipes, strings, and stops. Addison.

9. Regulation of musical chords by the fingers.

The further a string is strained, the less super-straining goeth to a note; for if required good winding of a string before it will make any note at all; and in the stops of lutes, the higher they go,
the less distance is between the frets. Bacon.

10. The act of applying the stops in medicine.

'Th' organ-found a time survives the stop.
Before it doth the dying note give up. Daniel.

11. A point in writing, by which sentences are distinguished.

Even the iron-pointed pen,
That notes the tragick dooms of men,
Wet with tears still'd from the eyes
Of the stony destinies,
Would have learn'd a softer style,
And have been sham'd to spoil
His life's sweet story by the haste
Of a cruel stop ill-plac'd. Crahan.

STO'P'COCK. n. f. [stop and cock.] A pipe made to let out liquor, stopp'd by a turning cock.

No man could spit from him without it, but would drivel like some paralytick or fool; the tongue being as a stopcock to the air, till upon its removal the spittle is driven away. Grew.

STO'P'GAP. n. f. [from stop and gap.] Something substituted; a temporary expedient.

STO'P'PAGE. n. f. [from stop.] The act of stopping; the state of being stopp'd.

The effects are a stoppage of circulation by too great a weight upon the heart, and suffocation. Arbuthnot.

The stoppage of a cough, or spitting, increases phlegm in the stomach. Floyer.

STO'P'PLE or Stopper. n. f. [from stop.] That by which any hole, or the mouth of any vessel, is filled up.

Bottles swung, or carried in a wheel-barrow upon rough ground, fill not full, but leave some air; for if the liquor come close to the stopple, it cannot flower. Bacon.

There were no flutes or stopples made for the ears, that any loud or sharp noise might awaken it, as also a soft and gentle murmur provoke it to sleep. Ray.

STO'RAX. n. f. [styrax, Latin.]

1. A plant.

2. A resinous and odoriferous gum.

I yielded a pleasant odour like the best myrra,
as galbanum, and sweet storax. Ecclesiasticus.

STORE. n. f. [stór, in old Swedish and Runick, is much, and is prefixed to other words to intend their signification; stor, Danish; floor, Islandick, is great. The Teutonic dialects nearer to English seem not to have retained this word.]

1. Large number; large quantity; plenty.

The ships are fraught with store of victuals, and good quantity of treasure. Bacon.

Nous yet, but store hereafter from the earth
Up hither like aerial vapours flew,
Of all things transitory and vain, when sin,
With vanity had fill'd the works of men. Milton.

Jove grant me length of life, and years good store
Heap on my bended back. Dryden.

2. A stock accumulated; a supply hoarded.

We liv'd supine amidst our flowing store,
We slept securely, and we dream'd of more. Dryden.

Divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame:
The sweet enthusiast from her sacred store
Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds,
And added length to solemn sounds. Dryden.

Thou, goddess, there, Britannia's idle adores:
How has the oft exhausted all her stores!
How oft in fields of death thy presence sought,
Nor thinks the mighty prize too dearly bought! Addison.

Their minds are richly fraught With philosophick stores. Thomson.

3. The state of being accumulated; hoard.
Is not this laid up in store with me, and sealed up among my treasures? Deuteronomy.

4. Storehouse; magazine.

Sulphurous and nitrous steam,
Concocted and adulter'd, they reduc'd
To black'd grain, and into store convey'd. Milton.
STORE. adj. Hoarded; laid up; accumulated.

What floods of treasure have flowed into Europe by that action, so that the cause of christendom is rais'd since twenty times told: of this treasure the gold was accumulate and store treasure; but the silver is full growing. Bacon.

TO STORE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish; to replenish.

Wife Plato said the world with men was stor'd,
That succour each to other might afford. Denham.
Her face with thousand beauties blest;
Her mind with thousand virtues stor'd;
Her power with boundless joy confest,
Her person only not ador'd. Prior.

2. To stock against a future time.

Some were of opinion that it were best to stay where they were, until more aid and store of virtuals were come; but others said the enemy were but barely stor'd with victuals, and therefore could not long hold out. Knolles.

One having stor'd a pond of four acres with carps, tench, and other fish, and only put in two small pikes, at seven years end, upon the draught, not one fish was left, but the two pikes grown to an excessive bigness. Hale.

The mind reflects on its own operations about the ideas got by sensation, and thereby stores itself with a new set of ideas, which I call ideas of reflection. Locke.

To store the vessel let the care be mine
With water from the rocks, and rosy wine,
And life-sustaining bread. Pope.

3. To lay up; to hoard.

Let the main part of the corn be a common stock, laid in and stor'd up, and then delivered out in proportion. Bacon.

STOREHOUSE. n. s. [store and house.]

1. Magazine; treasury; place in which things are hoarded and reposit'd against a time of use.

By us it is willingly confessed, that the scripture of God is a storehouse abounding with inestimable treasures of wisdom and knowledge, in many kinds over and above things in this kind barely necessary. Hooker.

Suffer us to famish, and their storehouses cramm'd with grain! Shakespeare.
Joseph opened all the storehouses, and sold unto the Egyptians. Genesis.

To these high powers a storehouse doth pertain,
Where they all arts and gen'ral reasons lay;
Which in the soul, ev'n after death, remain,
And no Lethæan blood can wash away. Davies.
My heart hath been a storehouse long of things
And sayings laid up, portending strange events. Milton.

The image of God was resplendent in man's practical understanding, that storehouse of the soul, in which are treasured up the rules of action and the seeds of morality. South.

As many different sounds as can be made by single articulations, so many letters there are in the storehouse of nature. Holder.

2. A great mass reposit'd.

They greatly joy'd merry tales to feign,
Of which a storehouse did with her remain. F. Qu.
STORER. n. s. [from store.] One who lays up.

STORIED. adj. [from story.] Furnished with stories; adorned with historical pictures.

Let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloisters pale,
And love the high embow'd roof,
With antick pillar, massy proof;
And storied windows, richly dight,
Casting a dim religious light. Milton.
How greedy minion or imperious wife
The trophied arches, storied halls, invade. Pope.

STORK. n. s. [stork, Saxon; ciconia, Lat.]
A bird of passage, famous for the regularity of its departure.

Its beak and legs are long and red; it feeds upon serpents, frogs, and insects: its plumage would be quite white, were not the extremity of its wings, and also some part of its head and thighs, black:
it sits for thirty days, and lays but four eggs:
they go away in the middle of August, and return in spring. Calmct.

The stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times. Jeremiah.

Who bid the stork, Columbus like, explore Heavens not his own, and worlds unknown before?
Who calls the council, states the certain day,
Who forms the phalanx, and who points the way?
Pope.

STORKSBILL. n. s. [geranium, Lat.] An herb. Ansforth.

STORM. n. s. [ystorm, Welsh; strom,
Saxon; storm, Dutch; stormo, Italian.]

1. A tempest; a commotion of the elements.

O turn thy rudder hitherward a while,
Here may thy storm-beat vessel safely ride. Spenser.
We hear this fearful tempest sing.
Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm. Shakespeare.

Then the upstays, unaided the while Herself, though sweetly unsupported flower,
From her base prop to far, and storm to nigh.

Sulphurous hail shot after us in storm. Milton.
Then stay, my child! storms beat, and rolls the main; Milton.

Oh beat those storms, and roll the seas, in vain!
Pope.

2. Assault on a fortified place.

How by storm the walls were won,
Or how the victor sack'd and burnt the town. Dryd.

3. Commotion; sedition; tumult; clamour; bufile.

Whilst I in Ireland nourish a mighty band,
I will stir up in England some black storm. Shaksp.

Began to scold and raise up such a storm,
That mortal ears might hardly endure the din. Shakespeare.

4. Affliction; calamity; distress.

A brave man struggling in the forms of fate. Pope.

5. Violence; vehemence; tumultuous force.
As oft as we are delivered from those either imminent or present calamities, against the storm and tempest whereof we all instantly craved favour from above, let it be a question what we should render unto God for his blessings, universally, sensibly, and extraordinarily bestowed. Hooker.

TO STORM. v. a. [from the noun.] To attack by open force.

From ploughs and harrows sent to seek renown,
They fight in fields, and storm the shaken town. Dryden.

There the brazen tow'r was storm'd of old,
When Jove descended in almighty gold. Pope.

TO STORM. v. n.

1. To raise tempests.

So now he storms with many a sturdy stormer,
So now his blustering blast each coast doth scourge. Spenser.

2. To rage; to fume; to be loudly angry.

Hoarse, and all in rage,
As mock'd they storm. Milton.

When you return, the master storms, the lady scolds. Swift.

While thus they rail, and scold, and storm
It passes but for common form. Swift.

STORMY. adj. [from storm.]

1. Tempestuous.

Bellowing clouds burst with a stormy sound,
And with an armed winter strew the ground. Addison.

The tender apples, from their parents rent
By stormy shocks, must not neglected lie. Philips.

2. Violent; passionate.

STORY. n. s. [storp, Saxon; storie, Dut.
storia, Italian; istoria.]

1. History; account of things past.

The fable of the dividing of the world between the three sons of Saturn, wrote from the true story of the dividing of the earth between the three brethren, the sons of Noah. Balgh.

These I have heard relating what was done,
Ere my remembrance: now hear me relate
My story, which perhaps thou hast not heard. Milt.

The four great monarchies make the subject of ancient story, and are related by the Greek and Latin authors. Temple.

Matters of fact, concerning times, places, persons, actions, which depend upon story, and the relation of others, these things are not capable of being proved by such scientific principles. Wilkins.

Governments that once made such a noise, as founded upon the deepest counsels and the strongest force, yet by some slight misfortune, which let in ruin upon them, are now so utterly extinct, that nothing remains of them but a name; nor are there the least traces of them to be found, but only in story. South.

2. Small tale; petty narrative; account of a single incident.

In the road between Berne and Soleure, a monument erected by the republic of Berne tells us the story of an Englishman not to be met with in any of our own writers. Addison.

3. An idle or trifling tale; a petty fiction.

Their flaws and faults would well become A woman's story at a winter's fire, Shakespeare.

Author's day by her grandame.
This scene had some bold Greek or British bard
Beheld of old, what stories had we heard
Of fairies, satyrs, and the nymphs their dames,
Then tents, their revels, and their am'rous flames!
Denham.

My maid left on the table one of her story books, which I found full of strange impertinence, of poor servants who came to be ladies. Swift.

4. [storp, place, Saxon.] A floor; a light of rooms.

Avoid enormous heights of seven stories, and the contrary fault of low distended fronts. Wotton.

Sonnets or elegies to Chloris

Might raise a house about two stories;

A lyric ode would flate; a catch

Would tile; an epigram would thatch. Swift.

TO STORY. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tell in history; to relate.

How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own hearing. Shaksp.

'Tis not vain or fabulous

What the sage poets, taught by th' heavenly muse,

Stor'd of old in high immortal verse,

Of dire chimeras and enchanted lies,

And rifted rocks whose entranc'd leads to hell. Milton.

It is stor'd of the brazen Colossus, in the island of Rhodes, that it was seventy cubits high; the thumbs of it being so big, that no man could grasp one of them with both his arms. Wilkins.

Recite them, nor in erring pity sent

To wound with stor'd griefs the filial ear. Pope.

2. To range one under another.

Because all the parts of an undisturbed fluid are of equal gravity, or gradually placed or stor'd according to the difference of it, any concretion that can be supposed to be naturally and mechanically made in such a fluid, must have a like structure of its several parts; that is, either be all over of a similar gravity, or have the more ponderous parts nearer to its basis. Bentley.

STORYTELLER. n. s. [story and tell.] One who relates tales in conversation; a tallorian, in contempt.

In such a satire all would seek a share,
And every fool will fancy he is there;

Old storytellers too must pine and die,

To see their antiquated wit laid by;

Like her, who mis'd her name in a lampoon,

And griev'd to find herself decay'd to soon. Dryden.

Company will be no longer pester'd with dull,
dry, tedious storytellers. Swift.

STOVE. n. s. [stog, Islandick, a fire-place;

stova, Saxon; estuve, French; stove,

Dutch.]

1. A hotbouse; a place artificially made warm.

Fishermen who make holes in the ice, to dip up such fish with their nets as resort thither for breathing light on swallows congested in clods of a slimy substance, and carrying them home to their stoves, the warmth recovereth them to life and flight.

Stoves, which could autumn of cold winter make, Egyptians in autumn to bring winter back. Beum.
The heat which arises out of the lesser spiracles brings forth nitre and sulphur; some of which it affixes to the tops and sides of the grottos, which are usually so hot as to serve for natural stoves or sweating-vaults. Woodward.
The most proper place for anction is a stove. Wiseman.

2. A place in which fire is made, and by which heat is communicated.

If the season prove exceeding piercing, in your great house kindle some charcoals; and when they have done smoking, put them into a hole sunk a little into the floor, about the middle of it. This is the safest stove. Evelyn.

To STOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To keep warm in a house artificially heated.

For December, January, and the latter part of November, take such things as are green all winter; orange trees, lemon trees, and myrtles, if they be stowed; and sweet marjoram warm set. Bacon.

To STOUND. v. n. [stunde, I grieved, I standick.]

1. To be in pain or sorrow. Out of use.

2. For stunned.

STOUND. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Sorrow; grief; mishap. Out of use. The Scots retain it.

Begin and end the bitter baleful stound, If less than that I fear. Spenser.

The fox his copesinate found, To whom complaining his unhappy stound, He with him set'd some better chance to find. Spenser.

2. Astonishment; amazement.

Thus we stood, as in a stound, And wet with tears, like dew, the ground. Gay.

3. Hour; time; season.

STOUR. n. f. [stur, Runick, a battle; stoupan, Saxon, to disturb.] Assault; incursion; tumult. Obsolete.

And he that harrow'd hell with heavy stour, The faulty souls from thence brought to his heav'nly bow'r. Fairy Queen.

Love, that long since has to thy mighty pow'r Perforce subdued my poor captiv'd heart, And raging now therein with restless stours, Dost tyrannize in every weaker part. Spenser.

The giant struck to mainly merciless, That could have overthrown a stoumy tower; And, were not heav'nly grace that him did bless, He had been pouldered all as thin as flower. But he was wary of that deadly stoure. Spenser.

STOUT. adj. [stout, Dutch; stolz, proud, German; stautan, Gothick, is to strike.]

1. Strong; lusty; valiant.

When I was young, I do remember how my father said, A stout champion never handled sword. Shakspeare.

Some captain of the land or fleet, Stout of his hands, but of a soldier's wit, Cries, I have sense to serve my turn, in store, And he's a rascal who pretends to more. Dryden.

2. Brave; bold; intrepid.

The stout-hearted are spoiled. Psalms.
He lost the character of a bold, stout, and magnanimous man, which he had been long reputed to be. Clarendon.

3. Obstinate; pertinacious; resolute; proud.

The lords all stand, To clear their cause, most resolutely stout. Daniel.
There virtue and stout honour paid the guards, Those only friends that could not be debarr'd. Bunsen.

4. Strong; firm.

The stoutest vessel to the storm gave way, And suck'd through loosen'd planks the rushing sea. Dryden.

STOUT. n. f. A cant name for strong beer.

Should but his muse descending drop A slice of bread and mutton chop, Or kindly, when his credit's out, Surprise him with a pint of stout; Exalted in his mighty mind, He flies and leaves the stars behind. Swift.

STOUTLY. adv. [from stout.] Lustily; boldly; obstinately.

STOUTNESS. n. f. [from stout.]

1. Strength; valour.

2. Boldness; fortitude.

His bashfulness in youth was the very true sign of his virtue and stoutness after. Ascham.

3. Obstinacy; stubbornness.

Come all to ruin, let Thy mother rather feel thy pride, than fear Thy dangerous stoutness: for I mock at death With as stout heart as thou. Shakspeare.

To STOW. v. a. [stow, Saxon; stoc, old Frisick, a place; stowen, Dutch, to lay up.] To lay up; to repose in order; to lay in the proper place.

Foul thief! where hast thou stow'd my daughter? Shakspeare.
I' th' holsters of the saddle-bow Two aged pistols he did stow. Hudibras.
Some stow their oars, or stop the leaky sides. Dryden.

All the patriots were beheaded, stowed in dungeons, or condemned to work in the mines. Addison.

The goddess shov'd the vessel from the shores, And stow'd within its womb the naval stores. Pope.

So grieves th' advent'rous merchant, when he throws All his long-toil'd treasure his ship stows Into the angry main. Carew.

STOWAGE. n. f. [from stow.]

1. Room for laying up.

In every vessel is stowage for immense treasures, when the cargo is pure bullion, or merchandise of as great a value. Addison.

2. The state of being laid up.

'Tis plate of rare device, and jewels Of rich and exquisite form; their value's great; And I am something curious, being strange, To have them in safe stowage. Shakspeare.

3. Money paid for stowing of goods.

STOWE, STOE, whether singly or jointly, are the same with the Saxon stow, a place. Gibson.

STRA'BISM. n. f. [strabism, Fr. strabismus, Latin.] A squinting; act of looking askint.

To STRA'DDLE. v. n. [supposed to come from striddle or stride.] To stand or walk with the feet removed far from each other to the right and left; to part the legs wide.

Let man survey himself, divested of artificial charms, and he will find himself a forked straddling animal, with bandy legs. Arbuthnot and Pope.

To STRAGGLE. v. a. [Of this word no etymology is known: it is probably a frequentative of stray, from straviare, Italian, of extra viam, Latin.]

1. To wander without any certain direction; to rove; to ramble.

But stay; like one that thinks to bring his friend A mile or two, and sees the journey's end, I straggle on too far. Suchling.
A wolf spied out a straggling kid, and purloined him. L'Estrange.
Children, even when they endeavour their utmost, cannot keep their minds from straggling. Locke.

2. To wander dispersedly.

He likewise enriched poor straggling soldiers with great quantity. Shakspeare.

They stood in Richard's name the straggling soldiers, who off of westwich stayed behind. Clarendon.

Form straggling mountaineers, for public good, To rank in tribes, and quit the savage wood; Houses to build, and them contiguous make, For cheerful neighbourhood and safety's sake. Tate.

3. To exuberate; to shoot too far.

Were they content to prune the lavish vine Of straggling branches, and improve the wine. Trim off the small superfluous branches on each side of the hedge, that straggle too far out. Mortimer.

4. To be dispersed; to be apart from any main body; to stand single.

Having passed the Syrens, they came between Scylla and Charybdis, and the straggling rocks, which seemed to call out great store of flames and smoke. Raleigh.

Wide was his parish, not contracted close In streets, but here and there a straggling house. Yet still he was at hand. Dryden.

STRAGGLER. n. f. [from straggle.]

1. A wanderer; a rover; one who forsakes his company; one who rambles without any settled direction.

The last should keep the countries from passage of stragglers from those parts, whence they use to come forth, and oftentimes use to work much mischief. Spenser.

Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again, Lash hence these over-weening rags of France, These famish'd beggars. Shakspeare.

Bottles missing are supposed to be half stolen by stragglers, and the other half broken. Swift.

2. Any thing that pushes beyond the rest, or stands single.

Let thy hand supply the pruning knife, And crop luxuriant stragglers, nor be loth To strip the branches of their leafy growth. Dryden.

His pruning hook corrects the vines, And the loose stragglers to their ranks confines. Pope.

STRAIGHT. adj. [strack, old Dutch.]

It is well observed by Ainsworth, that for not crooked we ought to write straight, and for narrow, strait; but for freight, which is sometimes found, there is no good authority.]

1. Not crooked; right.

Beauty made barren the swell'd boast Of him that best could speak; feature, laming The shrine of Venus, or straight-pight Minerva. Shakspeare.

A hunter's horn and cornet is oblique; yet they have likewise straight horns; which, if they be of the same bore with the oblique, differ little in sound. Save that the straight require somewhat a stronger blast. Bacon.

There are many several sorts of crooked lines, but there is one only which is straight. Dryden.

Water and air the varied form confound; The straight looks crooked, and the square grows round. Prior.

When I see a strait staff appear crooked while half under the water, the water gives me a false idea. Bacon.

2. Narrow; close. This should properly be strait. [cfroit, Fr. See STRAIT.]

Queen Elizabeth used to say of her instructions to great officers, that they were like to garments strait at the first putting on, but did by and by wear loose enough. Bacon.

3. Tense; tight. Of this sense it is doubtful whether it belongs to strait, chise, narrow; or to freight, not crooked. Pull the cord straight, may mean, draw it till it has no flexure; tie it strait about you, may mean, draw it into a narrower compass. This ambiguity has perhaps confounded the orthography.

STRAIGHT. adv. [straz, Danish; strait, Dutch.] Immediately; directly. The

Snake is naturally derived from the adjective, as a straight line is the shortest line between two points.

If the devil come and roar for them,
I will not fend them. I will after straight,
And tell him so. Shakespeare.

Those sticks which the nostrils straight abhor and expel, are not the most pernicious. Bacon.

With chalk I first describe a circle here,
Where the æthereal spirits must appear:
Come in, come in: for here they will be strait:
Around, around the place I fumigate. Dryden.

I know thy generous temper well;
Fling but the appearance of dishonour on it,
It straight takes fire, and mounts into a blaze.
Addison.

To STRAIGHTEN. v. a. [from straight.]

lings in a horse's throat.

STRANGULATION. n. s. [from strangle.]
The act of strangling; suffocation; the state of being strangled.

A sponge is anticholous, not in itself, for its powder is harmless; but because, being received into the stomach, it swelleth, and, occasioning its continual distention, induceth a strangulation. Brown.

The reduction of the jaws is difficult; and, if they be not timely reduced, there happen paralysis and strangulation. Wijeman.

STRANGURY. n. s. [crasypylia; stran- gurie, Fr.] A difficulty of urine attended with pain.

STRAP. n. s. [stroppe, Dutch; stroppa, Italian.] A narrow long slip of cloth or leather.

These clothes are good enough to drink in, and to be these boots too; and they be not, let them hang themselves in their own straps. Shakespeare.

I found but one husband, a lively cobler, that kicked and spurr'd all the while his wife was carrying him on; and had scarce pass'd a day without giving her the discipline of the strap. Spectator.

To STRAP. v. a. [from strap.] To beat with a strap.

STRAPPADO. n. s. Chastisement by world, I would not tell you on compulsion.

STRAPPING. adj. Vast; large; bulky;
Used of large men or women in contempt.

STRATA. n. s. [The plural of stratum, Lat.] Beds; layers. A philological term.

The terrestrial matter is disposed into strata, or layers, plac'd one upon another, in like manner as my earthly sediment, settling down from a fluid, will naturally be.

With how much wisdom are the strata laid,
Of different weight and of a different kind,
Of sundry forms for sundry ends design'd!

STRATAGEM. n. s. [στρατημα; strata- game, Fr.]

1. An artifice in war; a trick by which an enemy is deceived.

John Talbot I did tend for thee,
To tutor thee in stratagems of war. Shakespeare.

Every minute now
Should be the father of some stratagem. Shakespeare.

2. An artifice; a trick by which some advantage is obtained.

Route up your courage, call up all your counsels,
And think on all those stratagems which nature
Keeps ready to encounter sudden dangers.

Those oft are stratagems which errours seem;
Nor is it Homer nods, but we who dream. Pope.

STRAW. n. s. [strop, Saxon; stroo, Dutch.]

1. The stalk on which corn grows, and from which it is thrashed.

I can counterfeit the deep tragedian,
Tremble and start at wagging of a straw,
Intending deep suspicion. Shakspeare.

Plate him with gold,
And the strong lance of justice hurtles breaks;
Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it.

Apples in hay and straw ripened apparently;
but the apple in the straw more. Bacon.

My new straw hat, that's truly lin'd with green,
Let Peggy wear.

More light he treads, more tall he seems to rise,
And fronts a straw breadth nearer to the skies. Tickel.

2. Any thing proverbially worthless.

Thy aims, thy liberty, beside
All that's on th' outside of thy hide,
Are mine by military law,
Of which I will not bate one straw. Hudibras.
'Tis not a straw matter whether the main cause be right or wrong. T. T. Strange.

STRAWBERRY. n. s. [fragaria, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

Content with food which nature freely bred,
On wildings and on strawberries they fed. Dryden.
Strawberries, by their fragrant smell, seem to be cordial: the seeds obtained by shaking the ripe fruit in water, are an excellent remedy against the stone. The juice of strawberries and lemons in spring-water, is an excellent drink in bilious fevers.

STRAWBERRY Tree. n. s. [arbutus, Lat.]

It is ever green, the leaves roundish and ferrated on the edges; the fruit is of a fleshy substance, and very like a strawberry. Miller.

STRAWBUILT. adj. [straw and built.]

Made up of straw.
They on the smoothed plank,
The suburb of their strawbuilt cottdel,
New rubb'd with balm, expatiated. Milton.

phryganion, Lat.] A worm bred in straw.

STRAWY. adj. [from straw.] Made of straw; consisting of straw.

There the straw Greeks, ripe for his edge,
Fall down before him like the mower's swath.

In a field of corn, blown upon by the wind, there will appear waves of a colour differing from that of the rest; the wind, by depressing some of the ears, and not others, makes the one reflect more from the lateral and strawy parts than the rest. Boyle.

TO STRAY. v. n. [stro, Danish, to scut-ter; stravare, Italian, to wander.]

1. To wander; to rove.

My eye, descending from the hill, surveys
Where Thunee among the wanton valley strays.

Lo, the glad gales o'er all her beauties stray,
Breathe on her lips, and in her bosom play. Pope.

2. To rove out of the way; to range beyond the proper limits.

What grace hath thee more hithers brought this way?

Or doest thy feeble feet unswerving lither stray.
Spenser.

No where can I stray,
Save back to England: all the world's my way.

She doth stray about
By holy crosses, where the kneeling prays
For happy wedlock hours. Shakspeare.

Wand'rest thou within this lucid orb,
And stray'd from those fair fields of light above,
Amidst this new creation want'st a guide
To reconduct thy steps? Dryden.

3. To err; to deviate from the right.

We have erred and strayed. Common Prayer.

To STRAY. t. a. To mislead. Obsolete.

Stray'd his affection in unlawful love? Shakspeare.

STRAY. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Any creature wandering beyond its limits; any thing lost by wandering.

She hath herself not only well detended,
But taken and impounded as a stray
The King of Scots. Shakspeare.

Should I take you for a stray,
You must be kept a year and day.
When he has traced his talk through all its wild rambles, let him bring home his stray; not like the lost sheep, with joy, but with tears of penitence.

Seeing him wander about, I took him up for a stray. Dryden.

He cries out, neighbour hast thou seen a stray
Of bullocks and of heifers pass this way? Addison.

2. Act of wandering.

I would not from your love make such a stray,
To match you where I hate. Shakspeare.

STREAK. n. s. [strepce, Saxon; strecke, Dutch; stria, Italian.] A line of colour different from that of the ground.

Sometimes written stake.

The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day;
Now spurs the latest traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn. Shakspeare.

What mean those colour'd streaks in heav'n,
Diffused, as the brow of God appears? Milton.

The night comes on, we eager to pursue
Till the last streaks of dying day withdrew,
And doubtful moonlight did our rage deceive. Dryden.

Ten wildings have I gather'd for my dear,
How ruddy, like your lips, their streaks appear!

While the fantastick tulip strives to break
In two-fold beauty, and a parted streak. Prior.

To STREAK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To stripe; to variegated in hues; to dapple.

All the yearlings which were streak'd and pied Should fall as Jacob's lure. Shakspeare.

A mule admirably streaked and dappled with white and black. Sandys.

To-morrow, ere fresh morning streak the east,
With first approach of light we must be ris'n,
And at our pleasant labour, to reform
Yon flow'ry arbours. Milton.

Now let us leave this earth, and lift our eye
To the large convex of yon azure sky;
Behold it like an ample curtain spread,
Now streak'd and glowing with the morning red,
Anon at noon in flaming yellow bright,
And chusing sable for the peaceful night. Prior.

2. To stretch. Obsolete.

She lurks in midst of all her den, and streaks
From out a ghastly whirlpool all her necks;
Where, glotting round her rock, to fish the falls.

STREAKY. adj. [from streak.] Striped;
variegated by hues.

When the hoary head is hid in snow,
The life is in the leaf, and still between
The sits of falling shows appears the streaky green.

STREAM. n. s. [stream, Saxon; strom, Mandick; stroon, Dutch.]

1. A running water; the course of running water; current.

As plays the sun upon the glassy stream,
Twinkling another counterfeited beam. Shakspeare.

He brought streams out of the rock, and conduits of water to run down the rivers. Pausanias.

Cocytus nam'd, of lamentation load
Heard in the metal stream; fierce Phlegethon, Whose waves of torrent fire in flame with rage;
Far off from these, a flow and silent stream,
Lethæ, the river of oblivion, rolls
Her wat'ry labyrinth.

O could I flow like thee, and make thy stream
My great example, as thou art my theme!

Thou' deep yet clear, tho' gentle yet not dull,
Strong without rage, without o'erflowing full.

Thus from one common source our stream divides,
Ours is the stream, your's th' Arcadian side. Dryden.

Divided interests, while thou' hast th' to say,
Draw like two brooks thy middle stream away.

2. Any thing issuing from a head, and moving forward with continuity of parts.

The breath of the Lord is like a stream of heat.
stone. Job.

You, Drances, never want a stream of words.

The stream of beneficence hath, by several ma-lets which have since fallen into it, wonderfully enlarged its current. Atterbury.

3. Any thing forcible and continued.

Had their cables of iron chains had any great length, they had been unportable; and, being short, the ships must have stuck at an anchor in any stream of weather. Evelyn.

It is looked upon as insolence for a man to adhere to his own opinion, against the current of stream of antiquity. Locke.

4. Course; current.

With silken streamers the young Phæbus fanning.

The rosy morn began to rise,
And wav'd her saffron streamer through the skies.

Brave Rupert from afar appears,
Whose waving streamers the glad general knows.

The man of sense his meat devours,
But only swells the peck and flows:
And he must be an idle dromer,
Who leaves the pie, and gnaws the streamer.

STREAMY. adj. [from stream.]

1. Abounding in running water.

However strong the wind and day,
Denied the reddish water: where deep Meles
And rocky Crata flows, the chariot smok'd Obscure with rising dust. Prior.

2. Flowing with a current.

Before him flaming, his enormous shield
Like the broad sun illum'd all the field;
His nodding helm emits a streamy ray. Pope

He led us through fair streets, and all the way we went there were gathered people on both sides, standing in a row. Bacon

The streets are no larger than alleys. Sandys
When night

Darkens the streets, then wander forth the sons
(O Belial, down with insolence and wine;
Witness the streets of Sodom. Milton

The Italians, say the ancients, always considered the situation of a building, whether it were high or low, in an open square, or in a narrow street, and more or less deviated from their rule of art. Addison

When you tattle with some crony servant in the same street, leave your own street-door open. Swift

2. Proverbially, a public place.

That there be no leading into captivity, and no complaining in our streets. Psalms

Our public ways would be so crowded, that we should want street-room. Spectator

Let us reflect upon what we daily see practised in the world; and can we believe, if an apostle of Christ appeared in our streets he would attract his censure, and command us to be conform'd to the world? Rogers

STREETWALKER. n. f. [street and walk.]

A common prostitute, that offers herself to sale in the open street.

STRENGTH.

n. f. [strengh, Saxon.]

1. Force; vigour; power of the body.

But strength is in truth divided, and from just, laudable, nought merits but dispraise. Milton

Thou must outlive
Thy youth, thy strength, thy beauty, which will change

To wither'd, weak, and grey. Milton

Th' insulting Trojans came,
And menac'd us with force, our fleet with flame:
Was it the strength of this tongue-valiant lord,
In that black hour, that sav'd you from the sword? Dryden

2. Power of endurance; firmness; durability; toughness; hardness.

Not founded on the brittle strength of bones. Milton

Firm Dorick pillars found the solid base,
The fair Corinthian crown the higher space,
And all below is strength, and all above is grace. Dryden

3. Vigour of any kind; power of any kind.

Strength there must be either of love or war, even such contrary ways leading to the same unity. Holyday

God, in all things wise and just,
Hinder'd not Satan to attempt this mind
Of man, with strength culture and free-will arm'd. Milton

This act Shall crush the strength of Satan. Milton

4. Power of resistance; sureness; firmness.

Our cattle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn. Shakespeare

5. Support; security; that which supports.

Hereave me not thy aid,
Thy council, in this uttermost distress,
My only strength and stay. Milton

6. Power of mind; force of any mental faculty.

Aristotle's large views, acuteness and penetration of thought, and strength of judgment, few have equalled. Locke

He enjoyed the greatest strength of good sense, and the most exquisite taste of pohteness. Addison
We, like friendly colours, found our hearts unite,
And each from each contract new strength and light. Pope

7. Spirit; animation.

methinks I feel new strength within me rise,
Wings growing, and dominion given. Milton

Adam and first matron live
Had ended now their orisons, and found Strength added from above, new hope to spring
out of despair. Milton

8. Vigour of writing; nervous diction; force, opposed to looseness, in writing or painting.

Leave such to tune their own dull rhymes, and know

What's roundly smooth, or languishingly slow;
And praise the easy vigour of a line,
Where Denham's strength and Waller's sweetness join. Pope

Caracci's strength, Coreggio's softer line,
Paulo's tree stroke, and Titian's warmth divine. Pope

9. Potency of liquors.

10. Fortification; fortress.

The rashness of taking should not only be retarded by the guard of our heart, but fenced in by certain strengths placed in the mouth. Ben Jonson

He thought
This inaccessible high strength to have seiz'd. Milt.

Betray'd in all his strength, the wood belet;
All instruments, all arts, of ruin met. Denham

What they bodied would be a mischief to us, you are providing, shall be one of our principal strengths. Spratt

12. Legal force; validity; security.

13. Confidence imparted.

Certain services were due from the soldier to his captain, and from the captain to the prince; and upon the strength of such tenures, in after times, the descendants of these people and their kings
did subsist and make their wars. Davenant

The allies, after a successful summer, are too apt, upon the strength of it, to neglect their preparations for the ensuing campaign. Addison

14. Armament; force; power.

What is his strength by land? Shakespeare Nor was there any other strength designed to attend about his highness than one regiment. Clarendon

15. Persuasive prevalence; argumentative force.

This presupposed, it may then stand very well with strength and soundness of reason, thus to answer. Hooker

To STRENGTH. v. a. To strengthen. Not

Edward's happy order'd reign most fertile breeds
Plenty of mighty spirits, to strength his state. Daniel

To STRENGTHEN. v. a. [from strength.]

1. To make strong.

2. To confirm; to establish.

Authority is by nothing so much strengthened and confirmed as by custom; for no man easily difficults the things which he and all men have been always bred up to. Temple

These, bold Longinus! all the Nine inspire,
And bid'st your crutch with a poet's fire;
An ardent judge, who, zealous in his truth,
With warmth gives sentence, yet is always just;
Whose own example strengthens all his laws,
And is himself that great tubine he draws. Pope

If it were true that women were thus naturally vain and light, then how much more blameable is that education, which seems contrived to strengthen and increase this folly. Law

3. To animate; to fix in resolution.

Let us rise up and build; so they strengthened their hands for this work. Nehemiah

Charge Joshua, and encourage him, and strengthen him. Deuteronomy

4. To make to increase in power or security.

Let noble Warwick, Cobham, and the rest,
With powerful policy strengthen them; let Shals,
They fought the strengthening of the heathen. 1 Marston

To STRENGTHEN. v. a. To grow strong.

Oh men for flattery and deceit renown'd!
Thus when ye are young ye learn it all like him;
Till, as your years increase, that strengthens too,
T'is to poor minds. Otway

The utensils, that shall destroy at length, Grows with his growth, and strengthens with his strength. Pope

STRENGTHENER. } n. f. [from strength.]

ner.]

1. That which gives strength; that which makes strong.

Garlick is a great strengthener of the stomach, upon decays of appetite, or indigestion. Temple

2. [In medicine.] Strengtheners add to the bulk and firmness of the solids; cordials are such as drive on the vital actions; but these such as confirm the stamina. Quincy

STRENGTHLESS. adj. [from strength.]

1. Wanting strength; deprived of strength.

Yet are these men, whose strength is weak, and unable to support this lump of clay. Shakespeare

As the wretch, whose fever-weakened joints,
Like strong his hinges, buckle under him,
Impotent of his fit, breaks like a fire
Out of his keeper's arms. Shakespeare

2. Wanting potency; weak. Used of liquors.

This liquor must be inflammable or not, and yet subtle and pungent, which may be called spirit; or else strengthless or insipid, which may be named phlegm. Boyle

STRENUOUS. adj. [strenuus, Latin.]

1. Brave; bold; active; valiant; dangerously laborious.

Nations grown corrupt
Love bondage more than liberty;
Bondage with ease than strenuous liberty. Milton

2. Zealous; vehement.

He resolves to be strenuous for taking off the test, against the maxims of all wise christian governments, which always had some established religion, leaving at best a toleration to others. Swift to Pope

Citizens within the bills of mortality have been strenuous against the church and crown. Swift

STRENUOUSLY. adv. [from strenuous.]

1. Vigorously; actively.

Many can use both hands, yet will there divers remain that can strenuously make use of neither. Brown

2. Zealously; vehemently; with ardour.

1. Importance; important part.

The first of the table lies upon the ham of having a numerous flock of children. LeStrange

This, on which the great stress of the business depends, would have been made out with reasons sufficient. Locke

2. Importance imputed; weight ascribed.

A body may as well lay too little as too much stress upon a dream, but the less we heed them
the better. LeStrange

It showed how very little stress is to be laid upon the precedents they bring. Lecky

Consider how great a stress he laid upon this duty, while upon earth, and how earnestly he recommended it. Atterbury

3. Violence, force, either adding or subtracted.

By stretch of weather driv'n,
At last they landed. Dryden.
Though the faculties of the mind are improved by exercise, yet they must not be put to a stretch beyond their strength. Locke.

To STRETCH. v. a. [evidently from distress.]
To distress; to put to hardships or difficulties.

Stirred with pity of the stretched plight
Of this sad realm. Spenser.

To STRETCH. v. a. [repean, Saxon;
stretchen, Dutch.]

1. To extend, to spread out to a distance.
The stretching out of his wings shall fill the breadth of thy land. Isaiah.

plants his feet.
This fiery speech inflames his fearful friends;
They tug at every oar, and every stretcher bends.
Dryden.

To STREW. v. a. [The orthography of this word is doubtful. It is sometimes written strew, and sometimes strow; I have taken both: Skinner proposes strow, and Junius writes strow. Their reasons will appear in the word from which it may be derived.

Straw, Gothick; stroyen, Dutch; repean, Saxon; strewen, German;
strow, Danish. Perhaps strow is best,
being that which reconciles etymology with pronunciation. See STROW.]

1. To spread by being scattered.
The snow which does the top of Pindus strew,
Did never whiter shew. Spenser.

Is thine alone the seed that strews the plain?
The birds of heav'n shall vindicate their grain.
Pope.

2. To spread by scattering.
I thought thy bride-bed to have deck'd, sweet mud!
And not have strew'd thy grave. Shakspeare.

Here he tears of perfect moan,
Wept for thee in Helicon;
And some flowers and some bays,
For thy herse, to strew the ways. Milton.

3. To scatter loosely.
The calf he bury'd in the fire, ground it to powder, and strewed it upon the water, and made Israel drink of it. Exodus.

Whom e'en the savage beasts had spar'd, they kill'd,
And strew'd his mangled limbs about the field.
Dryden.

STREWMENT. n. f. [from strew.] Any thing scattered in decoration.

Her death was doubtful.—For charitable prayers,
Shards, flints, and pebbles should be thrown on her;
Yet here she is allow'd her virgin chaste,
Her maiden strewments, and the bringing home
Of hell and burial. Shakspeare.

STRIFE. n. f. [Latin.] In natural history, the small channels in the shells of cockles and scallops.

The salt, leisurely permitted to shoot of itself in the liquor, exposed to the open air, did shoot into more fair chrysaline strife than those that were gained out of the remaining part of the same liquor by a more hasty evaporation. Boyle.

STRIFE. } adj. [from stria, Lat. stria,
STRIFED. } Fr.] Formed in strife.
These effluvia fly by strifed atoms and winding particles, as Des Cartes conceiveth, or glide by streams attracted from either pole unto the equator. Brown.

Des Cartes imagines this earth once to have been a sun, and so the centre of a lesser vortex, whose axis still kept the same posture, by reason of the strife particles sliding no fit pores for their passages, but only in this direction. Ray.

Crystal, when incorporated with the elements, shows it broke, & striated or broken texture, like those rocks. Woodward.

STRATAGEM. n. f. [from stria; stria, Fr.]

Not keeping strictest watch. Milton.

As legions in the field their front display,
To try the fortune of some doubtful day,
And move to meet their foes with sober pace,
Strict to their figure, though in winter space. Dryden.

He checks the bold design;
And rules as strict his labour'd works confine,
As if the Stagyrte o'erlook'd each line. Pope.

2. Severe; rigorous; not mild; not indulgent.
Implore her, in my voice, that she make friends
To the strict deputy. Shakspeare.

By nature free, not over-ruled by fate
Inextricable, or strict necessity. Milton.

A strict hand be kept over children from the beginning, they will in that age be tractable; and if, as they grow up, the rigour be, as they deserve it, gently relaxed, former restraints will increase their love. Locke.

Nunn the rites of strict religion knew;
On every altar laid the incense due. Prior.

3. Confined; not extensive.
As they took the compass of their commission strict or larger, so their dealings were more or less moderate. Hooker.

duced.

8. Power; efficacy.

Their having equal authority for instruction of the young prince, and well agreeing, have equal force in divers faculties. Haywood.

Perfectly opaque bodies can but reflect the incident beams; those that are diaphanous retract them too, and that refraction has such a stroke in the production of colours generated by the trajectory of light through drops of water, that exhibit a rainbow through divers other transparent bodies. Boyle.

He has a great stroke with the reader, when he condemns any of my poems, to make the world have a better opinion of them. Dryden.

The subtle effluvia of the male seed have the greatest stroke in generation. Ray.

10. To STROKE. v. a. [reparan, Sax.]

1. To rub gently with the hand by way of kindness or endearment; to soothe.

Thus children do the silly birds they find

With stroking hurt, and too much crumming kill.

The senior weaned his younger shall teach,

More stroken and made of when aught it doth aile,

More gentle ye make it for yoke or the pale.

Thy praise or dispraise is to me alike,

One doth not stroke me, nor the other strike.

He set forth a proclamation, stroking the people with fair promises, and humouring them with in-vestives against the king and government. Bacon.

the council, it is better to chuse indifferent persons, than to make an indifferency by putting in those that are strong on both sides. Bacon.

The knight is a much stronger tory in the country than in town, which is necessary for the keeping up his interest. Addison.

9. Full; having any quality in a great degree; affecting the sight forcibly.

By mixing such powders, we are not to expect a strong and full white, such as is that of paper; but some dusky obscure one, such as might arise from a mixture of light and darkness, or from white and black, that is, a grey, or dun, or russet brown.

Thus shall there be made two bows of copper, an interior and exterior, by one reflexion in the drops, and an exterior and interior by two; for the light becomes fainter by every reflexion. Brewster.

STUMBLINGSTONE } ble.] Cause of stumbling; cause of error; cause of offence.
We preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumblingblock, and unto the Greeks foolishness. 1 Corinthians.
Shakespeare is a stumblingblock to these rigid criticks. Spectator.
This stumblingstone we hope to take away. Burnet.

STUMP. n. f. [Stump, Danish; stomp, Dutch; rompen, Dan. to lop.] The part of any solid body remaining after the rest is taken away.
He struck so strongly, that the knotty sting
Of his huge tail he quite in sunder cleft:
Five joints thereof he bew'd, and but the stump
him left. Spenser.
Your colt's tooth is not cast yet.—Not while I have a stump. Shakespeare.
He through the bushes scurrales;
A stump doth trip him in his pace,
Down comes poor Hob upon his face
Amongst the briars and brambles. Drayton.
Who, 'e'enle they're waded to the stumps,
Are repented heit by rumps. Hudibras.
A coach-horse snapt off the end of his finger, and I dressed the stump with common digelive. Wifem.
A poor ass, now wore out to the stumps, fell down under his load. L'Estrange.
Against a stump his tusks the monster grinds,
And in the sharpen'd edge new vigour finds. Dryd.
A tongue might have some resemblance to the stump of a feather. Green.
Worn to the stump in the service of the maids,
'tis thrown out of doors, or condemned to kindle a fire. Swift.

STUMPHY. adj. [from stump.] Full of stumps; hard; stiff; strong. A bad word.
They burn the stubble, which, being so stumpy,
they seldom plow in. Motimes.

To STUN. v. a. [German, Saxon; gerstun, noise.]
1. To confound or dizzy with noise.
An universal hubbub wild
Of stunning sounds, and voices all confus'd, Assaults his ear. Milton.
Still shall I hear, and never quit the score,
Stun'd with hoarse Codrus' Theife o'er and o'er? Dryden.
Too strong a noise stuns the ear, and one too weak does not act upon the organ. Chyene.
So Almer, wearied of being great,
And nodding in her chair of state,
Stun'd and worn out with endless chat
Of Will did this, and Nun said that.
Shouts as thunder loud affect the air,
And stun the birds releas'd. Prior.
The Britons, once a savage kind,
Defendants of the barbarous Huns,
With limbs robust, and voice that stuns,
You taught to modulate their tongues,
And speak without the help of lungs. Swift.

2. To make senseless or dizzy with a blow.
One hung a pole-ax at his saddle-bow,
And once a heavy mace to stun the foe. Dryden.
STUN. The pret. and part. pass. of sting.
To both these fibres have I sworn my love:
Each jealous of the other, as the stung
Are of the adder. Shakespeare.
With envy stung, they view each other's deeds;
The fragrant work with diligence proceeds. Dryd.
STUNN. The pret. of stunk.

To STUNT. v. a. [Stunta, Islandick.] To hinder from growth.
Though this usage stunted the girl in her growth, it gave her a hardy constitution, she had life and spirit. Arbuthnot.
There he stopt short, nor since has writ a title,
But has the wit to make the most of little;
Like stunted lute-bound trees, that just have got Sufficient sap at once to bear and rot. Pope.
The tree
Grew scrubby, dried a-top, and stunted;
And the next parson stubb'd and burnt it. Swift.

STUPE. n. f. [Stupa, Latin.] Cloth or flax dipped in warm medicaments, and applied to a hurt or sore.
A fomentation was by some pretender to surgery

SUBA'CT. v. a. [subactus, Latin.] To reduce; to subdue.
Tangible bodies have no pleasure in the comfort of air, but endeavour to subact it into a more dense body.
Bacon.

SUBA'CTION. n. f. [subactus, Lat.] The act of reducing to any state, as of mixing two bodies completely, or beating any thing to a very small powder.
There are of confection two periods: the one assimilation, or absolute conversion and subaction; the other maturation: whereof the former is most conspicuous in living creatures, in which there is an absolute conversion and assimilation of the nourishment into the body.
Bacon.

SUBA'LTERN. adj. [subalterne, French.] Inferiour; subordinate; or that in different respects is both superiour and inferiour. It is used in the army of all officers below a captain.
Love's subalterns, a duteous band,
Like watchmen round their chief appear;
Each had his lantern in his hand,
And Venus, mask'd, brought up the rear.
Prior.
There had like to have been a duel between two subalterns, upon a dispute which should be governor of Portsmouth.
Adams.
One, while a subaltern officer, was every day complaining against the pride of colonels towards their officers; yet, after he received his commission for a regiment, he confessed the spirit of colonelship was coming fast upon him, and it daily increased to his death.
Suff.
This sort of universal ideas, which may either be considered as a genus or species, is called subaltern.
Watts.

SUBALTERNATE. adj. [subalternus, Lat.] Succeeding by turns.
Dict.

SUBASTRIGENT. adj. [sub and astrigent.] Astringent in a small degree.

SUBBEADLE. n. f. [sub and beadle.] An under beadle.
They ought not to execute those precepts by simple messengers, or subbeadles, but in their own persons.
Ayliffe.

SUBCELESTIAL. adj. [sub and celestial.] Placed beneath the heavens.
The most refined glories of subcelestial excellencies are but more faint resemblances of these.
Glauville.

SURCHA'NTER. n. f. [sub and chapter; succentor, Latin.] The deputy of the precentor in a cathedral.

SURCLA'VIAN. adj. [sub and clavius, Latin.]

Subclavius is applied to any thing under the armpit or shoulder, whether artery, nerve, vein, or muscle.
The liver, though seated on the right side, yet, by the subclavian division, doth equidistantly communicate its activity unto either arm.
Brown.
The chyle first mixeth with the blood in the subclavian vein, and enters with it into the heart, where it is very imperfectly mixed, there being no mechanism nor fermentation to convert it into blood, which is effected by the lungs.
Arbuthnot.

SURCONSTELLATION. n. f. [sub and constellation.] A subordinate or secondary constellation.
As to the picture of the seven stars, if thereby be meant the Pleiades, or subconstellation upon the back of Taurus, with what congruity they are described, in a clear night an ordinary eye may discover.
Brown.

SURCONTRARY. adj. [sub and contrary.] Contrary in an inferiour degree.
If two particular propositions differ in quality, they are subcontraries; as, some vine is a tree; some vine is not a tree. These may be both true together, but they can never be both false.
Watts.

SURCONTRACTED. part. adj. [sub and contracted.] Contracted after a former contract.
Your claim,
I bar it in the interest of my wife;
'Tis she is subcontracted to this lord,
And I her husband contradict your banes.
Shaksp.

SURCUTA'NEOUS. adj. [sub and cutaneous.] Lying under the skin.

SUBDE'ACON. n. f. [subdeaconus, Latin.] In the Roman church they have a subdeacon, who is the deacon's servant.
Ayliffe.

SURDE'AN. n. f. [subdecanus, Latin.] The vicegerent of a dean.
Whenever the dean and chapter confirm any act, that such confirmation may be valid, the dean must join in person, and not in the person of a deputy or subdean only.
Ayliffe.

SUBDE'CUPL. adj. [sub and decuplus, Latin.] Containing one part of ten.

SURDERISO'RIOUS. adj. [sub and derisor.] Scoffing or ridiculing with tenderness and delicacy. Not used.
This subderisious mirth is far from giving any offence to us: it is rather a pleasant condiment of our conversation.
More.

SURDITI'TIOUS. adj. [subdititius, Latin.] Put secretly in the place of something else.

TO SURDIVERSIFY. v. a. [sub and diversify.] To diversify again what is already diversified.
The same wool one man felt into a hat, another weaves it into cloth, another into rags; and these variously subdiversified according to the fancy of the artificer.
Hale.

TO SURDIVID. v. a. [subdiviser, French, sub and divide.] To divide a part into yet more parts.
In the rise of eight, in tones, there be two beams, or half notes; so as if you divide the tones equally, the eight is but seven whole and equal notes; and if you subdivide that into half notes, as in the stops of a lute, it maketh the number thirteen.
Bacon.

When Brutus and Cassius were overthrown, soon after Antonius and Octavianus broke and subdivided.
Bacon.

The glad father glories in his child,
When he can subdivide a fraction.
Roscommon.

When the progenies of Cham and Japhet were divided into colonies, and those colonies were subdivided into many others, in time their descendants lost the primitive rites of divine worship, retaining only the notion of one deity.
Dryden.

SURDIVISION. n. f. [subdivision, French; from subdivide.]

1. The act of subdividing.
When any of the parts of any idea are further divided, in order to a clear explication of the whole, this is called a subdivision, as when a year is divided into months, each month into days, and each day into hours, which may be further subdivided into minutes and seconds.
Hume.

2. The parts distinguished by a second division.
How can we see such a multitude of souls cast under to many subdivisions of misery, without reflecting on the absurdity of a government that sacrifices the happiness of so many reasonable beings to the glory of one?
Adams.

In the decimal table the subdivisions of the cubit, as span, palm, and digit, are deduced from the shorter cubit.
Arbuthnot.

SURDOLOUS. adj. [subdulus, Latin.] Cunning; subtle; sly.

TO SURDUCE. v. a. [subduco, subducere, Latin.]

1. To withdraw; to take away.
Or nature said in me, and left some part
Not proof enough such object to sustain;
Or from my side subducing, took perhaps
More than enough.
Milton.

2. To subduct by arithmetical operation.

Take the other operation of arithmetic, subtraction; if out of that supposed infinite numbers of antecedent generations we should subduct ten, the residue must be less by ten than it was before, and yet still the quotient must be infinite.
Hale.

SUBDU'CTION. n. f. [from subducere.] 1. The act of taking away.
Possibly the divine beneficence subducing that influence which it communicated from the time of their first creation, they were kept in a state of immortality till that moment of the subduction.
Hale.

2. Arithmetical subtraction.
Suppose we take the other operation of arithmetic, subduction; if out of that infinite multitude of antecedent generations we should subduct ten, the residue must be less by ten than it was before that subduction, and yet still the quotient be infinite.
Hale.

TO SUBDU'E. v. a. [from subdo, or subdugere, Latin.]

1. To crush; to oppress; to sink; to overpower.
Nothing could have subdued nature
To such a lowliness, but his unkind daughters.
Them that rose up against me half thou subdued under me.
It ought were worthy to subdue
The soul of man.
Milton.

2. To conquer; to reduce under a new dominion.
Be fruitful and replenish the earth, and subdue it.
Gen. i.
Augustus Cæsar subdued Egypt to the Roman empire.
Peacham.

To overcome in battle, and subdue nations, and bring home spoils.
The Romans made those times the standard of their war, when they subdued the world.
Spitt.

3. To tame; to subact; to break.
Nor is 't unwholesome to subdue the land
By often exercise, and where before
You broke the earth, again to plow.
May.

SUBDU'EMENT. n. f. [from subducere.] Conquest. Not used, nor worthy to be used.
I have seen thee,
As hot as Perseus, spur thy Phrygian steed
Bravely despoiling tortois and subduements.
Shaksp.

SURDU'ER. n. f. [from subducere.] Conqueror; tamer.
Great god of might, that reigneth in the mind,
And all the body to thy best doth frame;
Victor of gods, subducer of mankind,
That dost the lion and the tiger tame,
Who can express the glory of thy might? Spenser.

Their curious eye
Discerns their great subducer's awful men
And corresponding features suit.
Philips.

Figs are great subducers of acrimony, useful in hoarseness and coughs, and extremely emollient.
Arbuthnot.

SURDU'PLE. } adj. [subduplex, French;
SURDUPLICATE. } sub and duplus, Lat.]

Containing one part of two.
As one of these under pulley doth abate half of that heaviness which the weight hath in itself, and cause the power to be in a subduplex proportion unto it, to two of these doth abate half of that which remains, and cause a subquadruple proportion, and three a subseptuple.
H. King.

The motion, generated by the forces in the whole passage of the body or thing through that space, shall be in a subduplicate proportion of the forces.
Newton.

SURJACENT. adj. [subjacens, Lat.] Lying under.
The superficial parts of mountains are washed away by rains, and borne down upon the subjacent plains.
Woodward.

TO SUBJECT. v. a. [subjectus, Lat.]

1. To put under.
The angel
Led them direct, and down the cliff as fast
To the subject plain.
Milton.

The most sublime and sublimed name:
 one short sub, sublimed to our eye,
 the sublimed between, sublimed lie. Pope.
 To reduce to sublimation; to make subordinate; to make submissive.
 Think not, young warriors, your dimmish'd same full tale of lustre, by sublimed rage
 the cool dictates of experience age. Dryden.
 To enslave; to make obnoxious.
 I live on bread like you, feel want like you, grief, need friends like you; sublimed thus,
 how can you say to me I am a king? Shakspeare.
 I see thee, in that fatal hour,
sublimed to the victor's cruel power,
 hence a slave.
 The blind will always be led by those that see,
 a fall into the ditch; and he is the most sublimed, the most enslaved, who is so in his understanding. Locke.

To expose; to make liable.
 If the vessels yield, it sublimed the person to all the inconveniences of an erroneous circulation. Arbuthnot.

To submit; to make accountable.
 God is not bound to sublimed his ways of operation to the scrutiny of our thoughts, and confine himself to do nothing but what we must comprehend. Locke.

To make subservient.
 He sublimed to man's service angel wings. Milt.
SUBJECT. adj. [subiectus, Latin.] Placed or situate under.

The eastern tower,
 whose height commands, as subject, all the vale
 to see the fight. Shakspeare.

Living under the dominion of another.
 Esau was never subject to Jacob, but founded a distinct people and government, and was himself prince over them. Locke.

Christ, since his incarnation, has been subject to the Father; and will be so also in his human capacity, after he has delivered up his mediatorial kingdom.
 Waterland.

Exposed; liable; obnoxious.
 Most subject is the fattest soil to weeds;
 And he the noble image of my youth overpread with them. Shakspeare.

All human things are subject to decay.
 And when fate summons monarchs must obey. Dryden.

Being that on which any action operates,
 whether intellectual or material.
 I enter into the subject matter of my discourse. Dryden.

SUBJECT. n. f. [subjet, French.]

One who lives under the dominion of another; opposed to governour.

Every subject's duty is the king's,
 But every subject's soul is his own. Shakspeare.

Never subject long'd to be a king.
 As I do long and wish to be a subject. Shakspeare.

Those I call subjects which are governed by the ordinary laws and magistracies of the sovereign. Davies.

We must understand and confess a king to be a subject, a subject to be a king; and therefore honour him by nature most due from the natural subject to the natural king. Holliday.

The subject must obey his prince, because God commands it; human laws require it. Swift.

Were subjects so but only by their choice,
 And not from birth did sub'd dominion take,
 Our prince alone would have the publick voice. Dryden.

Heroick kings, whose high perfections have made them await to their subjects, can struggle with and subdue the corruption of the times. Duvenant.

That on which any operation, either mental or material, is performed.

Now spurs the latest traveller apace
 To gain the temple inn, and near approaches
 The subject of our watch. Shakspeare.

The subject for heroick song pleased me. Milton.
 Here he would have us fix our thoughts; not are they too dry a subject for our contemplation. Decay of Piety.

I will not venture on to vice a subject with my severer style. More.

Make choice of a subject beautiful and noble, which, being capable of all the graces that colours and elegance of design can give, shall form a perfect art an ample field of matter wherein to expatiate. Dryden.

The subject of a proposition is that concerning which any thing is affirmed or denied. Watts.

My real design is, that of publishing your praises to the world; not upon the subject of your noble birth. Swift.

That in which any thing inheres or exists.

Anger is certainly a kind of baseness, as it appears well in the weakness of those subjects, in whom it reigns, children, women, old folks, sick folks. Bacon.

[In grammar.] The nominative case to a verb is called by grammarians the subject of the verb. Clarke.

SUBJECTION. n. f. [from subject.]

1. The act of subduing.
 After the conquest of the kingdom, and subjection of the rebels, enquiry was made who there were that, fighting against the king, had saved themselves by flight. Hume.

2. [subjection, French.] The state of being under government.

Because the subjection of the body to the will is by natural necessity, the subjection of the will unto God voluntary, we therefore stand in need of direction after what sort our wills and desires may be rightly conformed to his. Hooker.

How hard it is now for him to frame himself to subjection, that, having once fit before his eyes the hope of a kingdom, hath found encouragement. Spenser.

Both in subjection now to sensual appetite. Milton.

SUBJECTIVE. adj. [from subject.] Relating not to the object, but the subject.

Certainty, according to the schools, is distinguished into objective and subjective: objective is when the proposition is certainly true in itself; and subjective, when we are certain of the truth of it. Watts.

SUBINGRESSION. n. f. [sub and ingressus, Latin.] Secret entrance.

The pressure of the ambient air is strengthened upon the accession of the air sucked out; which forceth the neighbouring air to a violent subingression of its parts. Boyle.

To SUBJOIN. v. a. [sub and joindre, Fr.
subjungo, Latin.] To add at the end;
 to add afterward.

He makes an excuse from ignorance, the only thing that could take away the fault; namely, that he knew not that he was the high-priest, and sub- joins a reason. South.

SUBJUNCTIVE. adj. [subjunctus, Lat.] Sudden; hasty.

To SUBJUGATE. v. a. [subjuguer, Fr.
subjungo, Lat.] To conquer; to subdue;
 to bring under dominion by force.

O favourite virgin, that hast warm'd the breast
 Whose sovereign dictates subjugate the east! Prior.
 He subjugated a king, and called him his vassal. Baker.

SUBJUGATION. n. f. [from subjugate.]
 The act of subduing.

This was the condition of the learned part of the world, after their subjugation by the Turks. Hale.

SUBJUNCTION. n. f. [from subjungo, Latin.] The state of being subjoined;
 the act of subjoining.

The verb undergoes in Greek a different formation; and in dependence upon, or subjunction to, some other verb. Clarke.

SUBJUNCTIVE. adj. [subjunctivus, Lat.
subjunctif, French.]

1. Subjoined to something else,
 2. In grammar,

The verb undergoes a different formation to signify the same intentions as the indicative, yet not absolutely, but relatively to some other verb, which is called the subjunctive mood. Clarke.

SUBLAPSARIAN. adj. [sub and lapsus, SUBLAPSARY. Latin.] Done after the fall of man.

The doctrine of reprobation, according to the sub- lapsarian doctrine, being nothing else but a more pretension or non-election of some persons whom God left as he found, involved in the guilt of the first Adam's transgression, without any actual personal sin of their own, when he withdrew some others as guilty as they. Hammond.

SUBLATION. n. f. [sublatio, Latin.]
 The act of taking away.

SUBLEVATION. n. f. [sublevo, Latin.]
 The act of raising on high.

SUBLIMABLE. adj. [from sublime.] Possible to be sublimed.

SUBLIMABLENESS. n. f. [from sublima-
ble.] Quality of admitting sublimation.

He obtained another concrete as to taste and smell, and only sublimable, as common salt ammoniac. Boyle.

To SUBLIMATE. v. a. from sublime.
 1. To raise by the force of chymical fire.

2. To exalt; to heighten; to elevate.
 And as his actions rise, so raise they full their vein.

In words, whose weight best suits a sublimed strain.
 Dryden.

Not only the gross and illiterate souls, but the most aerial and sublimed, are rather the more proper fuel for an immaterial fire. Decay of Piety.

The precepts of christianity are so excellent and refined, and so apt to cleanse and sublimate the more gross and corrupt, as thews flesh and blood never revealed it. Decay of Piety.

SUBLIMATE. n. f. [from sublime.]
 1. Any thing raised by fire in the retort.

Enquire the manner of subliming, and what materials endure subliming, and what body the sublimate makes. Bacon.

2. Quicksilver raised in the retort.

SUBLIMATE. adj. Raised by fire in the vessel.

The particles of mercury, uniting with the acid particles of spirit of salt, compose mercury sublimate;
 and, with the particles of sulphur, chymical.

SUBLIMATION. n. f. [sublimation, Fr.
 from sublimate.]

1. A chymical operation which raises bodies in the vessel by the force of fire.

Sublimation differs very little from distillation, excepting that in distillation only the fluid parts of bodies are raised, but in this the solid and dry; and that the matter to be distilled may be either solid or fluid, but sublimation is only concerned about solid substances. There is also another difference, namely, that rarefaction, which is of very great use in distillation, has hardly any room in sublimation; for the substances which are to be sublimed, being solid, are incapable of rarefaction; and so it is only impulse that can raise them. Quincy.

Separation is wrought by weight, as in the settlement of liquors, by heat, by precipitation, or sublimation; that is, a calling of the several parts up or down, which is a kind of attraction. Bacon.

Since oil of sulphur per campanum is of the same nature with oil of vitriol, may it not be inferred that sulphur is a mixture of volatile and fixed parts, so strongly cohering by attraction, as to descend together by sublimation? Newton.

2. Exaltation; elevation; act of heightening or improving.

She turns
 Bodies to spirits, by sublimation strange. Davies.

Shall be presented to religious contemplation, who is defective and short in mind, which are but the rudiments and first draught of religion, a religion in the perfection, refinement, and sublimation of mankind. South.

SUBLINE. v. n. [from subline, Latin.]

1. High in place; exalted aloft.

They saw other powers, and towering th' air sublime
With elastic deign'd the ground. Milton.
Sublime on their a low's of steel is rear'd.
And due to those there keeps the word. Dryden.

2. High in excellence; exalted by nature.

My earthly strain'd to the height
In that celestial colloquy sublime. Milton.

Can it be, that souls sublime

Return to visit our mortal time?
And that the generous mind, releas'd by death,
Can ever lose limbs? Levi n.

3. High in style or sentiment; lofty; grand.

Easy to stile thy work, in sense sublime. Pope.

4. Elevated by joy.

Their hearts were pound and sublime,
Drunk with idollry, drunk with wine. Milton.

5. Lofly of men; elevated in manner.

He was sublime, and almost tumorous, in his looks and gestures. Milton.

His language was eye sublime declaim'd.
Absolute ruler. Milton.

SUBLINE. v. n. The grand or lofty style.

The sublime is a gallicism, but now naturalized.

Longinus strengthens all his lays,
And is himself the great job any he draws. Pope.

The sublime rises from the nobleness of thought,
the magnificence of the words, or the harmonious and lively turn of the phrase; the perfect sublime arises from all three together. Levi n.

TO SUBLINE. v. a. [from subline, French:]

From the adjective.]

1. To raise by a chymical fire.

Study our manuscript, thus we raise
Of letters, which have pass'd twice and more;
Thence write our annals, and in them lessons be
To all, whom love's subliming fire invades. Donne.

2. To raise on high.

Although thy trunk be neither large nor strong,
Nor can thy head, not help'd, itch sublime,
Yet, like a serpent, a tall tree can climb. Deham.

3. To exalt; to lighten; to improve.

Flowers, and then fruit,
Man's nourishment, by gradual scale sublin'd,
To vital spirits rises. Milton.

The fancies of most are moved by the inward springs of the corporeal machine, which, even in the most sublimed intellects, is dangerously influential. Chambers.

Art, being strengthened by the knowledge of things, may pass into nature by flow degrees, and so be sublimed into a pure genius, which is capable of distinguishing between the beauties of nature, and that which is low in her. Dryden.

Meanly they seek the blinding to confine,
And force that fat but on a part to shine;
Who h not close the southern wicket door,
Put up the bolts on each another's door. Pope.

TO SUBLINE. v. n. To rise in the chym-ical vessel by the force of fire.

The particles of sal ammoniac in sublimation carry up the particles of camomile, which will not sublime alone. Newton.

The fat is fixed in a gentle fire, and sublines in a great one. Levi n.

SUBLINE. v. n. [from subline] Loftily;
grandly.

In the high days, and all subline by great,
Thy lower chambers with all his ancient heat. Parnell.

Subline to be subline by body;
It is not poetry, but pick run. Pope.

SUBLINE. v. n. [from subline, Latin.]
The fine as sublimity.

SUBLINE. v. n. [from subline; subli- nere, French; sublimare, Latin.]

1. Height of place; local elevation.

2. Height of an are; excellence.

As religion looketh upon him whose majesty and power is infinite, as we ought we account not of it, unless we esteem it even according to that very height of excellency which our hearts conceive, when divine sublimity itself is rightly considered. Hooker.

In respect of God's incomprehensible sublimity and purity, things also, that God is neither a mind nor a spirit like other spirits, nor a light such as can be determined. Raleigh.

3. Loftiness of style or sentiment.

Milton's sublime, which excellency lies in the sublimity of his thoughts, of the greatness of which he triumphs over all the poets, modern and ancient,
Homer only excepted. Addison.

SUBLINGUAL. adj. [from sublingual, French;
sub and lingua, Latin.] Placed under the tongue.

Those sublingual humours should be intercepted,
before they mount to the head, by sublingual pills. Harvey.

SUBMARINE. adj. [from submarin, French;
sub and mar, Latin.]

Situate beneath the moon; earthly; terrestrial; of this world.

Dull submarine lovers! love,
Whole soul is flesh, cannot admit
Of absence, 'cause it doth remove
The thing which elemented it. Donne.

Night incarnate, with her shadowy come,
Halt way up hill this submarine vault. Milton.

Through loss of knowledge we our course advance,
Ditching till new worlds of ignorance;
And these ditches make us all contents
That submarine to us is but a cell. Deham.

The celestial bodies above the moon, being not subject to change, remain in perpetual order, while all things submarine are subject to change. Dryden.

Ovid had would be, to beware
Of hollowing gods, whose usual trade is,
Under presence of a king air,
To pick up submarine ladies. Swift.

The last philosopher to Rowley lies,
Where in a box the whole creation lies;
She sees the planets in their turns advance,
And forms, farther, this submarine dance. Young.

SUBMARINE. adj. [from sub and mare, Lat.]
Lying or acting under the sea.

This continuous may seem difficult, because these submarine navigators will want winds and tides for motion, and the light of the heavens for direction.

Not only the herbaceous and woody submarine plants, but also the biophyte affect this manner of growing, as I observed in corals. Ray.

TO SUBMERGE. v. a. [from submerger, Fr.
submergo, Latin.] To drown; to put under water.

So half my Egypt was submerged, and made
A culm for scald fumes. Shakespeare.

SUBMERSION. n. f. [from submersio, French; from submersus, Latin.] The act of drowning; state of being drowned.

The great Atlantic, and the ocean round to Plato's Tomb, almost contiguous to the western parts of Spain and Africa, yet wholly swallowed up by that ocean; which, if true, might win a passage from Africa to America by land before that submarine. Hale.

TO SUBMINISTER. v. a. [from subministrare, Latin.] To supply; to afford. Not much in use.

Some things have been discovered, not only by the industry of mankind, but even the inferior animals have subministrated unto man the invention of many things, natural, artificial, and medicinal. Hale.

Nothing subministrates apter matter to be converted into pestilent feminaries, than fumes of many tobaks. Harvey.

TO SUBMINISTER. v. n. To subserve;
to be useful to.

Fashions, as fire and water, are good servants, but bad masters, and subminister to the best and worst purposes. L'Estrange.

SUBMISSA. adj. [from submissa, Latin.]

Humble; submissive; obsequious.

King James, mollified by the bishop's submissive eloquent letters, wrote back, that though he were a part moved by his letters, yet he should not be fully satisfied except he spoke with him. Hervey.

Nearer his presence, Adam, though not aw'd,
Yet with submissive approach, and reverence mov'd.
As to a superior nature, bowed low. Milton.

Rejoicing, but with awe,
In adoration at his feet I fell.
Submiss: he rear'd me. Milton.

SUBMISSION. n. f. [from submission, French;
submissio, Latin.]

1. Delivery of himself to the power of an other.

Submission, dauphin! 'tis a mere French word.
We English warriors wot not what it means. Shakespeare.

2. Acknowledgment of inferiority or dependance; humble or suppliant behaviour.

In all submission and humility
York doth present himself unto your highness. Shakespeare.

Great prince, by that submission you'll command
Than e'er your haughty coming wou'd bring. Shakespeare.

3. Acknowledgment of a fault; confession of error.

Be not as extreme in submission, as in offence.
Submission. Shakespeare.

4. Obsequiousness; resignation; obedience.

No duty in religion is more justly required by God Almighty, than a perfect submission to his will in all things. Shakespeare.

SUBMISSIVE. adj. [from submissus, Latin.] Humble; testifying submission or suriority.

On what submissive message art thou sent?
Her at his feet submissive in distress.
He thus with peaceful words uprind.
Sudden from the golden throne
With a submissive step I hant'd down,
The glowing gird and from my hair I took,
Love in my heart, she hence in my love. Pope.

SUBMISSIVELY. adv. [from submissus, Latin.] Humbly; with confession of inferiority.

The goddess,
Sole in her time, submissively replies. Deham.

Her speech even these submissively uprind
From rights of subjects, and the power of laws.
Then pious silence reigns, and talk declines. Deham.

SUBMISSIVENESS. n. f. [from submissus, Latin.] Humility; confession of fault or inriority.

It thou sin in wine and wantonness,
Doth not the root, nor make thy theme thy glory.
Finally gets pardon by submissiveness.
But he that boasts thus that out of his body,
He makes that war with God, and doth deny,
With his poor clod of earth, the precious sky. Deham.

SUBMISSLY. adv. [from submissus, Latin.] Humbly; with submission.

Humility consists, not in wearing mean clothes and going softly and submissly, but in mean opinion of thyself. Levi n.

TO SUBMIT. v. a. [from submittere, French;
submitto, Latin.]

1. To let down; to sink.

Sometimes the hill submits itself awhile
In small descents, which do its height beguile;
And sometimes mounts, but to as billows play,
Whose rise not hinders but makes short our way. Dryden.

Neptune flood,
With all his hosts of waters at command,
Beneath them to submit th' officious flood.
And with his trident thov'd them off the land. Dryden.

2. To subject; to resign without resistance to authority.

Being in the distress, and submit itself under to hands.

Christian people submit themselves to conformable observance of the lawful and religious constitutions of their spiritual rulers.

Will ye submit your neck, and chuse to bend
the supple knee?

To leave to discretion; to refer to judgment.

Whether the condition of the clergy be able to bear a heavy burden, is submitted to the house.

SUBMIT. v. n. To be subject; to acquiesce in the authority of another; to yield.

To thy husband's will Thou shalt submit: he over thee shall rule.

Our religion requires from us, not only to forego pleasures, but to submit to pain, disgrace, and even death.

SUBMULTIPLE. n. s. A submultiple number or quantity is that which is contained in another number, a certain number of times exactly: thus 3 is submultiple of 21, as being contained in it seven times exactly.

SUBOCCTAVE. } adj. [sub and octavus, SUBOCCTUPLE. } Latin; and octuple.]
Containing one part of eight.

As one of three under pulleys abates half of that burden of the weight, and causes the power to be in a subdupple proportion; so two of them abate half that which remains, and cause a subquadruple proportion, three a subseptuple, four a suboctuple.

Had they erected the cube of a foot for their principal concave, and geometrically taken its suboctave, the congruities, from the cube of half a foot, they would have divided the congruity into eight parts, each of which would have been regularly the cube of a quarter foot, their well-known palm; this is the course taken for our gallies, which has the power for its suboctave.

SUBORDINACY. } n. s. [from subordi-SUBORDINANCY. } nate. Subordinacy is the proper and analogical word.]

1. The state of being subject.

Pursuing the imagination through all its extrava-gancies, is no improper method of correcting, and bringing it to act in subordinacy to reason.

2. Series of subordination.

The subordinancy of the government changing hands so often, makes an unsteadiness in the management of the publick interests.

SUBORDINATE. adj. [sub and ordinatus, Latin.]

1. Inferior in order, in nature, in dignity or power.

It was subordinate, not enslaved, to the understanding, not as a servant to a master, but as a queen to her king, who acknowledges a subjection, yet retains a majesty.

Whether dark prefaces of the night proceed from my latent power of the soul during her abstraction, or from any operation of subordinate spirits, has been a dispute.

2. Descending in a regular series.

Two armies were assigned to the leading of two generals, rather commanders than martial men, yet assisted with subordinate commanders of great experience.

His next subordinate Asking, thus to him in secret spoke.

They carry such plain characters of disagreement or animosity, that the several kinds and subordinate species of hate easily distinguished.

TO SUBORDINATE. v. a. [sub and ordinare, Latin.] To range under another. Not inferior, but proper and elegant.

It is to have subordinated picture and sculpture to architecture, as their mistress, so there are other minor arts subordinate to them.

SUBORDINATELY. adv. [from subordinate.] In a series regularly descending.

It being the highest step of it, to which all others subordinately tend, one would think it could be capable of no improvement.

SUBORDINATION. n. s. [subordination,
Fr. from subordinare.]

1. The state of being inferior to another.

Nor can a council rational decide,
But with subordination to her guide.

2. A series regularly descending.

The natural creatures having a local subordination, the rational having a political, and sometimes a sacred.

3. Place of rank.

It we would suppose a ministry where every single person was of distinguished piety, and all great officers of state and law diligent in choosing persons who in their several subordinations would be obliged to follow the examples of their superiors, the empire of irreligion would be soon destroyed.

TO SUBORN. v. a. [subornor, Fr. subornor,
Latin.]

1. To procure privately; to procure by secret collusion.

His judges were the self-same men by whom his accusers were suborned.

Fond wretch! thou know'st not what thou speak'st.

Or else thou art suborn'd against his honour
In hateful practice.

Reason may meet
Some specious object, by the foe suborn'd,
And fall into deception.

His artificial bosom heaves dissembled sighs,
And tears suborn'd fall dropping from his eyes.

2. To procure by indirect means.

Those who by ling'ring sickness lose their breath,
And those who by despair suborn their death.

SUBORNATION. n. s. [subornation, Fr. from suborn.] The crime of procuring any to do a bad action.

Thomas earl of Desmond was through false subornation of the queen of Edward iv. brought to his death at Treadash most unjustly.

You let the crown
Upon the head of it is forgetful man,
And for his sake wear the detected blot
Of murderous subornation.

The fear of punishment in this life will prevent men from few vices, since some of the blackest often prove the surest steps to favour; such as ingratitude, hypocrisy, treachery, and subornation.

SUBORNER. n. s. [subornor, Fr. from suborn.] One that procures a bad action to be done.

SUBPOENA. n. s. [sub and pana, Lat.]
A writ commanding attendance in a court, under a penalty.

SUBQUADRUPL. adj. [sub and quadrupl.] Containing one part of four.

As one of three under pulleys abates half of that burden of the weight both in it, and causes the power to be in a subdupple proportion unto it, to two of them abate half of that which remains, and cause a subquaduple proportion.

SURQUINTUPLE. adj. [sub and quintuple.]
Containing one part of five.

If unto the lower pulley there were added another, then the power would be into the weight in a subquintuple proportion.

SUPERIOR. n. s. [superior, Fr. from superior.] The superior.

He was chosen superior of the college.

SUPERSTITION. n. s. [superstition, Fr. from superstus, Lat.] The act of claiming a favour by surmise or unauthorised representation.

SUPERSTITION. adj. [superstition, Fr. superstus, Lat.] France early obtained from a superior, by commanding some truth which would have proved grant.

TO SUPROGATE. v. a. [suprogo, Lat.]
See SUPROGATE.

TO SUBSCRIBE. v. a. [subscribere, Fr. subscribo, Latin.]

1. To give consent to, by underwriting the name.

They united by subscribing a covenant, which they putted to be no other than had been subscribed in the reign of King James, and that his majesty himself had subscribed it, by which imposition people of all degrees engaged themselves in it.

The reader seeks the names of those persons by whom this letter is subscribed.

2. To attend by writing the name.

Their particular testimony ought to be better credited, than any other subscribed with an hundred hands.

3. To submit. Not used.

The king gave to-night his power to Conrad to execution: all is gone.

TO SUBSCRIPT. v. a.

1. To give consent.

Of us, with whole hand, no one creed was set down, nor consented for.

2. To promise a stipulated sum for the promotion of any undertaking.

SUBSCRIBER. n. s. [from subscriptio, Lat.]

1. One who subscribes.

2. One who contributes to any undertaking.

Let a pamphlet come out upon a demand in a proper measure, every one of the party who can spare a shilling shall be a subscriber.

SUBSCRIPTION. n. s. [from subscriptio,
Latin.]

1. Any thing underwritten.

The man asked, Are ye christians? We answered we were; fearing the lets because of the cross we had seen in the subscription.

2. Content or attestation given by underwriting the name.

3. The act or state of contributing to any undertaking.

The work he plied;
Stocks and subscriptions pour'd in every side.

South Sea subscribers take who please,
I envy not but liberty.

4. Substitution; oblation. Not in use.

Thou art you, you elements, with unkindness;
In ever pays you freedom, call'd you children;
You owe me no subscription.

SUBSECTION. n. s. [sub and sectio, Lat.]
A subdivision of a larger section into a letter; a section of a section.

SUBSEQUENT. adj. [from subsequor, Latin.] Following in train.

SUBSEPTUPLE. adj. [sub and septuplus,
Latin.] Containing one of seven parts.

It into this lower pulley there were added another, then the power would be into the weight in a subseptuple proportion; if a third, a sub-septuple.

SUBSEQUENCE. n. s. [from subsequor, Latin.] The state of following; not precedence.

By this treaty, we sent notice of the order of precedence and subsequence in which they do put.

SUBSEQUENT. adj. [from subsequens, Lat.] This word is improperly pronounced long in the second syllable by Shakspeare. Following in train; not preceding.

In such instances, although small pricks to their subsequent volubility, there is seen the baby figure of the giant mass Of things to come, at large. Shakspeare.
The subsequent wags come on before the precedent vanish. Bacon.

Why does each consenting sign With prudent harmony combine In turns to stave, and subsequent appear To gird the globe and regulate the year? Prior.
This article is introduced as subsequent to the treaty of Munster, made about 1648, when England was in the utmost confusion. Suiff.

SUBSEQUENTLY. adv. [from subsequent.] Not so as to go before; so as to follow in train.

To men in governing most things fall out accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their preconceived ends; but they are forced to comply subsequently, and so strike in with things as they fall out, by posthumous after-applications of them to their purposes. South.

TO SUBSERVE. v. a. [subservio, Lat.] To serve in subordination; to serve instrumentally.

Not made to rule, But to subserve where wisdom bears command. Milton.

It is a greater credit to know the ways of captivating nature, and making her subserve our purposes, than to have learned all the intrigues of policy. Glauclie.

The memory hath no special part of the brain devoted to its own service, but uses all those parts which subserve our sensations, as well as our thinking powers. Walth.

SUBSERVIENCE. n. f. [from subserve.]

SUBSERVIENCY. n. f. Instrumental fitness, use, or operation.

Wicked spirits may by their cunning carry farther in a seeming confederacy or subserviency to the designs of a good angel. Dryden.

There is an immediate and still subserviency of the spirits to the empire of the soul. Hale.

We cannot look upon the body, wherein appears so much fitness, use, and subserviency to infinite functions, any otherwise than as the effect of continuance. Bentley.

There is a regular subordination and subserviency among all the parts to beneficial ends. Cheyne.

SUBSERVIENT. adj. [subserviens, Lat.] Subordinate; instrumentally useful.

Hammond had an incredible dexterity, scarce ever reading any thing which he did not make subservient in one kind or other. Felt.

Philosophers and common heathens believed one God, to whom all things were referred; but under this God they worshipped many inferior and subservient gods. Stillingfleet.

These ranks of creatures are subservient one to another, and the most of them servient to man. Ray.

While awake, we feel none of those motions continually motion the disposal of the corporeal principles subservient herein. Grew.

Sense is subservient unto fancy, fancy unto intellect. Grew.

We are not to consider the world as the body of God; he is an uniform being, void of organs, members, or parts; and they are his creatures, subordinate to him, and subservient to his will. Newton.

Most critics, fond of some subservient art, Still make the whole depend upon a part; They talk of principles, but notions praise, And all to one lord fully sacrifice. Pope.

SUBSEXUPLE. adj. [sub and sexuplus, Lat.] Containing one part of six.

One of these under pellics abates half of that heaviness the weight hath, and causes the power to be in a subduplex proportion unto it, two of them a subquadruple proportion, three a subsextuple. Wilkins.

TO SUBSIDE. v. n. [subsideo, Lat.] To sink; to tend downward. It is commonly used of one part of a compound, sinking in the whole. Pope has used it rather improperly.

He shook the sacred honours of his head, With terror trembled heav'n's subsiding hill, And from his shaken curls ambrosial dews distill. Dryden.

Now Jove suspends his golden scales in air, Weighs the men's wits against the lady's hair: The doubtful beam long nods from side to side; At length the wits mount up, the hairs subside. Pope.

SUBSIDENCE. n. f. [from subsideo.] The SUBSIDENCY. n. f. act of sinking; tendency downward.

This gradual subsidiency of the abyss would take up a considerable time. Burnet.

This miscellany of bodies being determined to subsidence merely by their different specific gravities, all those which had the same gravity subsided at the same time. Woodward.

By the alternate motion of those air bladders, whose surfaces are by turns freed from mutual contact, and by a sudden subsidence meet again by the ingress and egress of the air, the liquor is still farther attenuated. Arbuthnot.

SUBSIDIRARY. adj. [subsidiare, Fr. subsidiarius, Lat. from subsidiy.] Assistant; brought in aid.

Enter substances burn the blood, and are a sort of subsidiary gall. Arbuthnot.

SUBSIDY. n. f. [subsideo, Fr. subsidiy, Lat.] Aid, commonly such as is given in money.

They advised the king to send speedy aids, and with much alacrity granted a great rate of subsidiy. Bacon.

'Tis all the subsidiy the present age can raise. Dryden.

It is a celebrated notion of a patriot, that a house of commons should never grant such subsidiy as give no pain to the people, lest the nation should acquiesce under a burden they did not feel. Addison.

TO SUBSIGN. v. a. [subsigno, Lat.] To sign under.

Neither have they seen any deed, before the conquest, but subsigned with crosses and single names without signatures. Camden.

TO SUBSIST. v. n. [subsisto, Fr. subsisto, Latin.]

1. To be; to have existence.
2. To continue; to retain the present state or condition.

Firm we subsist, but possible to swerve. Milton.
The very foundation was removed, and it was a moral impossibility that the republic could subsist any longer. Suiff.

3. To have means of living; to be maintained.

He shone so powerfully upon me, that, like the heat of a Russian summer, he ripened the fruits of poetry in a cold climate; and gave me wherewithal to subsist in the long winter which succeeded. Dryden.

Let us remember those that want necessities, as we ourselves should have desired to be remembered, had it been our sad lot to subsist on other men's charity. Atterbury.

4. To inhere; to have existence by means of something else.

Though the general natures of these qualities are sufficiently distant from one another, yet when they come to subsist in particulars, and to be clothed with several accidents, then the difference is not so easy. South.

SUBSISTENCE or SUBSISTENCY. n. f. [subsistence, Fr. from subsist.]

1. Real being.

The flesh, and the conjunction of the flesh with God, began both at one instant; his making and taking to himself our flesh was but one act; in that in which there is a personal subsistence but not and that from everlasting.

We know as little how the union is dissolved, as how it is first commenced. Glauclie.

Not only the things had subsistence, but the very images were of some creatures existing. Stillingfleet.

2. Competence; means of supporting life. His viceroy could only propose to himself a comfortable subsistence out of the plume of his province. Addison.

3. Inherence in something else.

SUBSISTENT. adj. [subsistens, Lat.]

1. Having real being. Such as deny spirits subsistent without bodies will with difficulty affirm the separate existence of their own. Brady.

2. Inherent. These qualities are not subsistent in those bodies but are operations of fancy begotten in function else. Beattie.

SUBSTANCE. n. f. [substantia, Fr. substantia, Latin.]

1. Being; something existing; something of which we can say that it is.

Since then the soul works by herself alone, Springs not from sense, nor humours well agree: Her nature is peculiar, and her own; She is a substance, and a perfect being. Deane.

The strength of gods, And this ethereal substance, cannot fail. Milne.

2. That which supports accidents. What creatures there inhabit, of what mold And substance? Milne.

Every being is considered as subsisting in itself, and then it is called a substance, or it is said to sit in and by another, and then it is called a mode or manner of being. Wall.

3. The essential part. It will serve our turn to comprehend the substance, without confining ourselves to scrupulous exactness in form. Digby.

This edition is the same in substance with the Latin. Bar.

They are the best epitomes, and let you sit with one cast of the eye the substance of a hundred pages. Addison.

4. Something real, not imaginary; some thing solid, not empty. Sheds down to night

Have struck more terror to the soul of Richard, Than can the substance of ten thousand soldiers Arm'd in proof, and led by shallow Richmond. Shakspeare.

He the future evil shall no less

In apprehension than in substance feel. Milne.

Heroic virtue did his actions guide, And he the substance, not the appearance, chose: To rescue one such friend he took more pains, Than to destroy whole thousands of such foes. Dryden.

God is no longer to be worshipped and believed in as a god foretelling and alluring by type, but as a god who has performed the substance of what he promised. Nyssa.

5. Body; corporeal nature.

Between the parts of opaque and coloured bodies are many spaces, either empty or replenished with mediums of other densities, as, water between the tinging corpuscles which with any liquor is impregnated, air between the aqueous globules that constitute clouds or mists, and for the most part space void of both air and water; but yet perhaps not wholly void of all substance between the parts of hard bodies. Nyssa.

The qualities of plants are more various than those of animal substances. Arbuthnot.

There may be a great and constant cough, with an extraordinary discharge of stagnant matter while, notwithstanding, the substance of the lungs remains sound. Blackmore.

6. Wealth; means of life.

He hath eaten me out of house and home, and hath put all my substance into that substance of his, but I will have some of it out again. Shakspeare.

We are destroying many thousand lives, and exhausting our substance, but not for our own interest. South.

SUBSTANTIAL. n. f. [from substantia, Fr. from substantia, Lat.]

1. Real; actually existing.
If this atheist would have his chance to be a real and substantial agent, he is more stupid than the vulgar. Bentley.

2. True; solid; real; not merely seeming.
O blessed, blessed night! I am afraid,
Being in sight, all this is but a dream;
Too flattering sweet to be substantial. Shakespeare.
To give thee being, I lent
Out of my side to thee, nearest my heart, Substantial life. Milton.

It happens to be a substantial good,
Not fram'd of accidents, nor subject to them,
I err'd to seek it in a blind revenge.
Time, as a river, hath brought down to us what is more light and superficial, while things more solid and substantial have been immerged. Glennville.

The difference betwixt the empty vanity of ostentation, and the substantial ornaments of virtue. L'Estrange.

Observations are the only sure grounds whereon to build a lasting and substantial philosophy. Wadsw.
A solid and substantial greatness of soul, looks down with neglect on the censures and applauses of the multitude. Addison.

This useful, charitable, humble employment of yourself, is what I recommend to you with greatest earnestness, as being a substantial part of a wife and pious life. Law.

3. Corporeal; material.
How shine these planets with substantial rays?
Does innate lustre gild their measur'd days?
The sun appears flat like a plate of silver,
The moon as big as the sun, and the rainbow a large substantial arch in the sky; all which are gross substances. Watts.

4. Strong; stout; bulky.
Substantial doors,
Cross-barr'd and bolted fast, fear no assault. Milt.

5. Responsible; moderately wealthy; possessed of substance.
Trial of crimes and titles of right shall be made by verdict of a jury, chosen out of the honest and most substantial freeholders. Spenser.
The merchants, and substantial citizens, cannot make up more than a hundred thousand families. Addison.

SUBSTANTIALITY. n. f. [from substantial,
Lat.]

1. The state of real existence.

2. Corporeity; materiality.
Body cannot act on any thing but by motion; motion cannot be received but by quantity and matter: the soul is a stranger to such gross substantiality, and owns nothing of these. Glennville.

SUBSTANTIALLY. adv. [from substantial,
Lat.]

1. In manner of a substance; with reality of existence.
In him his Father shone substantially express'd. Milton.

2. Strongly; solidly.
Having to substantially provided for the north,
they promised themselves they should end the war that summer. Clarendon.

3. Truly; solidly; really; with fixed purpose.

The laws of this religion would make men, if they would truly observe them, substantially religious towards God, chaste, and temperate. Tillotson.

4. With competent wealth.

SUBSTANTIALNESS. n. f. [from substantial, Lat.]

1. The state of being substantial.

2. Firmness; strength; power of holding or lasting.
When substantialness combineth with delightfulness, substance with sweetness, how can the language which consists of these sound other than most full of sweetness? Comden.

In degree of substantialness next above the Do-mance, following the third, and adorning the second degree. Watson.

SUBSTANTIATE. n. f. [without singular.]

Essential parts.
Although a custom introduced against the substantiation of an appeal be not valid, as that it should not be appealed to a superior but to an inferior judge, yet a custom may be introduced against the accidental of appeal. Ayliffe.

To SUBSTANTIATE. v. a. [from substantia, Lat.]

To make to exist.
The accidental of any act is said to be whatever advances to the act itself already substantiated. Ayliffe.

SUBSTANTIVE. n. f. [from substantif, Fr. substantivum, Lat.] A noun betokening the thing, not a quality.

Claudian perpetually clothes his sense at the end of a verse, commonly called golden, or two sub-stantives and two adjectives, with a verb betwixt them to keep the peace. Dryden.

SUBSTANTIVE. adj. [from substantivus, Lat.]

1. Solid; depending only on itself. Not in use.
He considered how sufficient and substantive this land was to maintain itself, without any aid of the foreigner. Bacon.

2. Betokening existence.

One is obliged to join many particulars in one proposition, because the repetition of the substantive verb would be tedious. Abramnot.

SUBSTANTIVELY. adv. [from substantivus,
Lat.]

As a substantive.
To SUBSTITUTE. v. a. [from substituer, Fr. substitutus, from sub and statuo, Lat.]

To put in the place of another.
In the original design of speaking, a man can substitute none for them that can equally conduce to his honour. Gowerment of the Tongue.

If a swarthy tongue
Is underneath his humid palate hung,
Reject him then, and substitute another. Dryden.

Some few verses are inserted or substituted in the room of others. Congreve.

SUBSTITUTE. n. f. [from substitut, Fr. from the verb.]

1. One placed by another to act with delegated power.

Were you sworn to the duke, or to the deputy?
—To him and his substitutes. Shakespeare.
You've taken up,
Under the counterfeited zeal of God,
The subjects of his substitute, my father,
And here upstart'd them. Shakespeare.

Hast thou not made me here thy substitute,
And these inferior far beneath me set? Milton.

Providence delegates to the supreme magistrate the finite power for the good of men, which that supreme magistrate transfers to those several substitutes who act under him. Addison.

2. It is used likewise for things; as, one medicine is a substitute for another.

SUBSTITUTION. n. f. [from substitution, Fr. sub-stitutio, from substitute, Lat.] The act of placing any person or thing in the room of another;
the state of being placed in the room of another.

He did believe
He was the duke, from substitution,
And executing th' outward face of royalty,
With all prerogative. Shakespeare.

Nor sal, sulphur, or mercury can be separated from any perfect metals; for every part, to be separated, may easily be reduced into perfect metal without substitution of that which chymists imagine to be wanting. Bacon.

To SUBSTRATE. v. a. [from subtrahere, Lat. subtraction, French.]

1. To take away part from the whole.

2. To take one number from another.

SUBSTRATION. n. f. [from subtrahere, French.]

1. The act of taking away part from the whole.
I cannot call this piece Tully's nor my own.

being much altered not only by the change of the style, but by addition and subtraction. Deham.

2. [In arithmetick.] The taking of a lesser number out of a greater of like kind, whereby to find out a third number, being or declaring the inequality, excess, or difference between the numbers given.
Cocker.

SUBSTRUCTION. n. f. [from substructio, from sub and struo, Lat.] Underbuilding.

To found our habitation firmly, examine the bed of earth upon which we build, and then the underfillings, or substruction, as the ancients called it.

SUBSTYLAR. adj. [from sub and stylus, Lat.] Substylar line is, in dialing, a right line, whereon the gnomon or style of a dial is erected at right angles with the plane.
DiD.

Erect the style perpendicularly over the substylar line, so as to make an angle with the dial-plane equal to the elevation of the pole of your place.
Mason.

SUBSULTIVE. adj. [from subsultus, Latin.]

SUBSULTORY. adj. [from subsultus, Latin.] Bouncing; moving by starts.

SUBSULTORILY. adv. [from subsultory, Lat.]

In a bounding manner; by fits; by starts.
The spirits spread even, and move not subsultorily; for that will make the parts close and pliant.
Bacon.

SUBTANGENT. n. f. In any curve, is the line which determines the intersection of the tangent in the axis prolonged.
DiD.

To SUBTEND. v. a. [from sub and tendo, Lat.]
To be extended under.

In rectangles and triangles, the square which is made of the side that subtendeth the right angle, is equal to the squares which are made of the sides containing the right angle. Brown.

From Aries rightways draw a line, to end
In the time round, and let that line subtend
An equal triangle: now since the lines Must three times touch the round, and meet threes times.

Where'er they meet in angles, those are trines. Creech.

SUBTENSE. n. f. [from sub and tensus, Lat.]
The chord of an arch.

SUBTERR. [Lat.] In composition, signifies under.

SUBTERRILE. adj. [from subterfluo, Lat.]

SUBTERRILEOUS. adj. [from subterfluo, Lat.]

Running under.

SUBTERRUGGE. n. f. [from subterfuge, Fr. subterand fugio, Lat.] A shift; an evasion;
a trick.

The king cared not for subterfuges, but would stand even, and appear in any thing that was to his mind. Bacon.

Notwithstanding all their fly subterfuges and finely evasions, yet the product of all their endeavours is but as the bath of the labouring mountains, wind and emptiness. Glennville.

Affect not little shifts and subterfuges to avoid the force of an argument. Watts.

SUBTERRANEAL. adj. [from sub and terra,
Lat.]

SUBTERRANEAN. adj. [from sub and terra,
Lat.]

SUBTERRANEOUS. adj. [from sub and terra,
Lat.]

SUBTERRANY. adj. [from sub and terra, Lat.]

Lying under the earth; placed below the surface.

Metals are wholly subterranean; whereas plants are put above earth, and part under. Bacon.

In subterranean, as the subterranean of their tribes,
are bristling and mercury. Bacon.
The force
Of subterranean wind transports a hill
Torn from Pelorus, or the shattered side
Of thundering Etna, whose combustible
And fuel'd entrails thence conceiving fire, Sublim'd with mineral fury, and the winds. Milton.

Attention proceeded from the change made in the neighbouring subterranean parts by that great configuration.

Tell by what paths, what subterranean ways, Back to the fountain's head the sea conveys The relient rivers.

Let my soft minutes glide obscurely on, Like subterraneous streams, unheard, unknown

At in the open hall amazed stood,
At suddenness of that unwary fight,
And wond'ring at his breathless hasty mood.

He speedily run forward, counting his suddenness his most advantage, that he might overtake the English.

The rage of people is like that of the sea, which once breaking bounds, overflows a country with that suddenness and violence as leaves no hope of flying.

SUDORIFICK. [sudorifique, Fr. sudor and facio, Lat.] Provoking or causing sweat.

Physicians may will provoke sweat in bed by bottles, with a decoction of sudorifick herbs in hot water.

Exhaling the most liquid parts of the blood by sudorifick or watery expositions, brings it into a morbid state.

SUDORIFICK. n. f. A medicine provoking sweat.

As to sudorifick, consider that the liquid which goes off by sweat is often the most subtle part of the blood.

SUDOROUS. adj. [from sudor, Lat.] Consisting of sweat. Not used.

Beside the fragments and sudorous adhesions from men's hands, nothing proceedeth from gold in the usual decoction thereof.

SUDS. n. f. [from suden, to seeth; whence robben, Sax.]

1. A lixivium of soap and water.
2. To be in the suds. A familiar phrase for being in any difficulty.

To SUE. v. a. [suer, Fr.]

1. To prosecute by law.
If any sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also.
2. To gain by legal procedure.
3. [In falconry.] To clean the beak, as a hawk.

To SUE. v. n. To beg; to entreat; to petition.

Full little knowest thou that hast not try'd,
What hell it is in suing long to bide.

If men thou deign to love and sue,
At thy command, to all these mountains be.

When madens sue,
Men give like gods.
We were not born to sue, but to command.

Ambassadors came unto him as far as the mouth of the Euphrates, suing unto him for peace.

For this, this only favour let me sue,
Refuse it not: but let my body have
The last retreat of human kind, a grave.
Despise not then, that in our hands bent we
These holy boughs, and sue with words of pray'r.

'Twill never be too late,
To sue for chains, and own a conqueror.
The fair Egyptian
Courtied with freedom now the beauteous slave,
Now salt'ring suet, and thren'ning now did rave.

By adverse destiny constrain'd to sue
For counsel and redress, he sues to you.

To SUE. v. a. To obtain by entreaty; with out. The expression is perhaps improper.

Nor was our blessed Saviour only our propitiation to die for us, but he is still our advocate, continually interceding with his Father in the behalf of all true penitents, and suing out a pardon for them in the court of heaven.

SUET. n. f. [suet, an old French word, according to Skinner.] A hard fat, particularly that about the kidneys.

The stomach being suet, yields not to escaroticks.
The stomach.

SUF

SUET. adj. [from suet.] Consisting of suet; resembling suet.

If the matter forming a wen resembles fat or a suet substance, it is called stetoma.

To SUFFER. v. a. [suffero, Lat. souffrir, French.]

1. To bear; to undergo; to feel with sense of pain.

A man of great wrath shall suffer punishment.

A woman suffered many things of physicians, and spent all the day.

Shall we then live thus vile, the race of heav'n thus trampled, thus expell'd to suffer here,
Cling and these torments? Better these than worse,
By my advice, since fate is payable Scilicet us, and omnipotent decrees.
The victor's will To suffer us to do,
Our strength is equal, not the law unjust
That to do us
Obedience impos'd,
On penalty of death, and suffering death.

2. To endure; to support; not to sink under.

Our spirit and strength entire Strain to suffer and support our pains.

3. To allow; to permit; not to hinder.

He wonder'd that your lordship
Would suffer him to spend his youth at home.

Oft have I seen a hot overweening cur
Run back and bite, because he was withheld:
Who being suffer'd, with the bear's fell paw
Hath clapt his tail betwix his legs and cry'd.

My duty cannot suffer
To obey in all your daughter's hard commands;

Rebuke thy neighbour, and not suffer sin upon him.

I suffer them to enter and possess.
He that will suffer himself to be informed by observation, will find few signs of a soul accustomed to much thinking in a new-born child.

4. To pass through; to be affected by; to be acted upon.

The air now must suffer change.

To SUFFER. v. n.

1. To undergo pain or inconvenience.

My breast I arm, to overcome by suffering.

Prudence and good-breeding are in all stations necessary; and most young men suffer in the want of them.

2. To undergo punishment.

The father was first condemn'd to suffer upon a day appointed, and the son afterwards the day following.

He thus
Was forc'd to suffer for himself and us
Hear to his father's sorrows with his crown.

3. To be injured.

Publick business suffers by private infirmities, and kingdoms fall into weakness by the diseases or decays of those that manage them.

SUFFERABLE. adj. [from suffer.] Tolerable; such as may be endured.

Thy rages be
Now no more sufferable

It is sufferable in any to use what liberty they list in their own writing, but the contracting and extending the lines and sense of others would appear a thankless office.

SUFFERABLY. adv. [from sufferable.] Tolerably; so as to be endured.

An infant Titan held the in her arms;
Yet sufferably bright, the eye might bear
The ungrown glories of his beamy hair.

SUFFERANCE. n. f. [from suffer; souffrance, Fr.]

1. Pain; inconvenience; misery.

He must not only die,
But thy unkindness shall the death draw out
To ling'ring sufferance.

SUF

How much education may reconcile young people to pain and sufferance, the examples of Sparta shew.

2. Patience; moderation.

He thought t' have slain her in his fierce despair;
But hasty heat tempering with sufferance wide,
He said his hand.

He hath given excellent sufferance and vigour to the fullerers, arming them with brave courage

Not was his sufferance of other kindnesses as pity than that he evidenced in the reception of calumny.

And should I touch it nearly, bear it
With all the sufferance of a tender friend.

3. Toleration; permission; not hindrance.

In process of time, sometimes by sufferance, and sometimes by special leave and favour, they come to themselves oratories not in any sumptuous or stately manner.

Most wretched man,
That to affections does the bridle lend;
In their beginning they are weak and wan,
But soon through sufferance grow to fearful end.

Some villains of my court
Are in content and sufferance in this

Both gloried to have 'scap'd the dycean flood
As gods, and by their own recover'd strength,
Not by the sufferance of supernal power.

SUFFERER. n. f. [from suffer.]

1. One who endures or undergoes pain or inconvenience.

This evil on the Philistines is fall'n,
The sufferers then will scarce molest us here
From other hands we need not much to fear

He, when his love was bounded in a few,
That were unhappy that they might be true,
Made you the favorite of his last sad times,
That is, a sufferer in his subjects crimes.

She returns to me with joy in her line, not the sight of her husband, but from the good luck she has had at cards; and if she has been a sufferer, I am doubly a sufferer by it: she comes home out of humour, because she has been throwing away my estate.

The history of civil wars and rebellions does it make such deep and lasting impressions, as even of the same nature in which we or our friends have been sufferers.

Often these unhappy sufferers expire for want of sufficient vigour and spirit to carry on the usual regimen.

2. One who allows; one who permits.

SUFFERING. n. f. [from suffer.] Pain suffered.

Rejoice in my sufferings for you.
With what strength, what steadiness of mind,
He triumphs in the midst of all his sufferings!

We may hope the sufferings of innocent people, who have lived in that place which was the seat of rebellion, will secure from the like attempts

It increased the smart of his present sufferings to compare them with his former happiness.

Then it is that the reasonableness of God's providence, in relation to the sufferings of good men in this world, will be fully justified.

To SUFFICE. v. n. [suffire, Fr. sufficere, Lat.] To be enough; to be sufficient; to be equal to the end or purpose.

If thou ask me why, suffice to my genius no good.

To recount almighty works,
What words or tongue of seraph can suffice

Or heart of man suffice to comprehend
The indolence we have, sufficing for our present happiness, we desire not to venture the change; being content; and that is enough.

He lived in such temperance, as was enough to make the longest life agreeable, and in such course of piety, as sufficed to make the most tedious death so alio.

SUFFICE. v. a.

To afford; to supply.

A strong and succulent moisture is able, without having help from the earth, to justify the sprouting of the plant.

Thou king of horned floods, whose plenteous urn justifies fountains to the fruitful corn,
Shall there my morning long and evening vows.

The power appeard, with winds justify'd the land,
The bellying canvas strutted with the gale.

To satisfy; to be equal to want or demand.

Israel, let it justify you of all your abominations.

Perched corn she did eat, and was sufficient to, and suffice thee that thou know'st us happy.

He our conqueror left us this our strength,

That we may to justify his vengeance.

When the herd, suffice to, did late repair

To rocky heaths, and to the forest late.

SUFFICIENCY. n. f. [From sufficere, Fr. from sufficere, Lat.]

State of being adequate to the end proposed.

'Tis all men's office to speak patience

To those that wring under the load of sorrow;

But no man's virtue nor sufficiency

To be to moral, when he shall endure

The like himself.

His sufficiency is such, that he belittles and pol-lifies, his plenty being unexhausted.

Thus he did with that readiness and sufficiency,

As at once gave testimony to his ability, and to the evidence of the truth he asserted.

2. Qualification for any purpose.

I am not so confident of my own sufficiency, as not willingly to admit the counsel of others.

The bishop, perhaps an Irishman, being made edge, by that law, of the sufficiency of the ministers, may dislike the Englishman as unworthy.

Then professor De Wit was a minister of the greatest authority and sufficiency ever known in that state.

3. Competence; enough.

An elegant sufficiency, content.

4. Supply equal to want.

The most proper subjects of dispute are questions not of the very highest importance, nor of the meanest kind, but rather the intermediate questions between them: and there is a large sufficiency of them in the sciences.

It is used by Temple for that conceit which makes a man think himself equal to things above him; and is commonly compounded with self.

Sufficiency is a compound of vanity and ignorance.

SUFFICIENT. adj. [From sufficere, Fr. from sufficere, Lat.]

Equal to any end or purpose; enough;

competent; not deficient.

Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.

Heaven yet retains

Number sufficient to peopled her realms.

Man is not sufficient of himself to his own happiness.

It is sufficient for me, if, by a discourse four times out of the way, I shall have given occasion to others to cast about for new discoveries.

She would ruin us in silk, were not the quantity that goes to a large pin cushion sufficient to make her own and petticoat.

Sufficient beneficence is what is competent to maintain a man and his family, and maintain hospitality, and likewise to pay and satisfy such dues belonging to the bishop.

Seven months are a sufficient time to correct vice in a Yahoo.

1. Qualified for any thing by fortune or otherwise.

In saying he is a good man, understand me, that he is sufficient.

SUFFICIENTLY. adv. [From sufficere, Lat.]

To a sufficient degree; enough.

If religion did possess sincerely and sufficiently the hearts of all men, there would need be no other restraint from evil.

Seem I to thee sufficiently possess'd

Of happiness?

All to whom they are proposed, are by his grace sufficiently moved to attend and consent to them, yet not so much as to embrace them, for it were not enough to move them, and if it were not enough to move them, none would embrace them.

In a few days, or hours, if I am to leave this carcase to be buried in the earth, and to find myself either for ever happy in the favour of God, or eternally banished from all light and peace; in many words sufficiently express the bitterness of every thing else.

SUFFISANCE. n. f. [Fr.] Excels;

plenty. Obsolete.

There him rests in notions suffisance

Of all gladness and kingly joyance.

To SUFFOCATE. v. a. [From suffocare, Fr.

suffoco, Lat.] To choke by exclusion or interception of air.

Let gallows gape for dog, let man go free,

And let not hemp his windpipe suffocate.

This chaos, when degree is suffocate,

Falls the choking.

Air but momentarily remains in our bodies, only to reanimate the heart; which being once performed, left, being felt-heated again, it should suffo- cate that part, it hatches back the same way it passed.

A swelling discontent is apt to suffocate and smother without passage.

All involved in smoke, the latent foe

From every chimney suffocated folk.

SUFFOCATION. n. f. [From suffocare, Fr. from suffoco, Lat.] The act of choking; the state of being choked.

Diseases of stoppings and suffocations are dangerous.

White consists in an equal mixture of all the primitive colours, and black in a suffocation of all the rays of light.

Mulberries are best corrected by vinegar. Some of them being poisonous, operate by suffocation, in which the best remedy is wine or vinegar, and to bring them out as soon as possible.

SUFFOCATIVE. adj. [From suffocare, Lat.]

Having the power to choke.

From rain, after great frosts in the winter, glandu-lous tumours and suffocative catarrhs proceed.

SUFFRAGAN. n. f. [From suffragare, Fr. from

suffragare, Lat.] A bishop considered as subject to his metropolitan.

The four archbishops of Mexico, Lima, S. Foy, and Domingo, have under them twenty five suffra-

gan bishops, all liberally endowed and provided for.

Suffragan bishops shall have more than one ruling episcopate.

Richard, archbishop of Canterbury, modestly took upon him to declare five articles void, in his capacity to his suffragans.

To SUFFRAGATE. v. n. [From suffragare, Lat.]

To vote with; to agree in voice with.

No tradition could covertly prevail, unless there were some common minority of somewhat inherent in nature, which suits and suffragates with it, and cloaths with it.

SUFFRAGE. n. f. [From suffragare, Fr. from suffragare, Lat.]

Vote; voice given in a controverted point.

Noble considerations, thus far is perfect,

Only your suffrages I will expect.

At the assembly for the choosing of consuls.

They would not abet by their suffrages or preference the designs of those innovations.

The fairest of our island dare not commit their cause to the suffrage of those who most partially adore them.

Fabius might joy in Scipio, when he saw

A beardless contol made a, and the law,

And join his suffrage to the votes of Rome.

This very variety of sea and land, hill and dale,

is extremely agreeable, the ancients and moderns

giving the suffrages unanimously hereon.

In this and St. Astin confirm by their suffra- ges the observation made by the heathen writers.

To the low and to the testimony let the appeal be in the last place, and next to the united suffrage of the primitive churches, as the best and safest comment upon the other.

dy, it may be attempted by suffumigation.

SUFFUMIGE. n. f. [From suffumigare, Lat.] A medical fume. Not used.

For external means, drying suffumiges or smoke are preferred with good success, they are usually composed out of frankincense, myrrh, and pitch.

To SUFFUSE. v. a. [From suffundere, Lat.]

To spread over with something expansible, as with a vapour or a tincture.

Suspicious, and fantasticall furniture,

And jealousy suffused, with jaumice in her eyes.

To that recess,

When purple light shall next suffuse the faces,

With me again.

Inflated of love calvined cheeks,

With flowing rapture bright, dark looks succeed,

Suffuse and glowing with meander fire.

SUFFUSION. n. f. [From suffundere, Fr. from

suffundere, Lat.]

1. The act of overspreading with any thing.

2. That which is infused or spread.

A drop of oil is infused into their oaks,

Or don't suffuse a cloud.

The orb of Phobus, when he climbs on high,

Appears at first but as a little obdurate eye,

And when his clouded disc is clear and drawn to bed,

His ball is with the time suffused.

To state that have the passion, or like suffusion

of eyes, objects appear of that colour.

SUG. n. f. [From suga, Lat. to suck.]

Sugar is a resinous substance, or trout lice, which is a kind of wax and like a clove or pin, with a big head, and sticks close to him, and sucks his moisture.

SUGAR. n. f. [From saccharum, Fr. from saccharum,

Latin.]

1. The native salt of the sugar-cane, obtained by the expression and evaporation of its juice.

All the blood of Zebulun's body stirred in her,

as wine will do when sugar is hastily put into it.

Lumps of sugar hole themselves, and twine

Their subtle essence with the soul of wine.

A grocer in London gave for his rebus a sugar-

loaf standing upon a star of ice.

Saccharum candidum shoots into angular figures,

by placing a great many sticks across a vessel of liquid sugar.

If the child must have sugar-plums when he has a mind, rather than be out of humour; why, when he is grown up, must he not be satisfied too with wine? Locke.

In a sugar-baker's drying-room, where the air was heated fifty-four degrees beyond that of a human body, a sparrow died in two minutes. Abraham.

A piece of some geniculated plant, is said to be part of a sugar-cane. Woodward.

5. Any thing proverbially sweet.

Your fair discourse has been as sugar,
Making the hard way sweet and delectable. Shakespeare.

3. A chymical dry crystallization.

Sugar of lead, though made of that impudic metal, and four salt of vinegar, has in it a sweetness surpassing that of common sugar. Boyle.

TO SUGAR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To impregnate or season with sugar.

Short thick tabs
In painting marmors dull'd out of her breast,
That ever-bubbling tongs, the sugar'd nest
Of her delicious soul, that there does lie,
Parting in streams of liquid melody. Crawford.

2. To sweeten.

Thou would'st have plung'd thyself
In general riot, and never learn'd
The icy precepts of respect, but followed
The sugar'd game before thee. Shakespeare.
His glowing fire his errand daily find,
And sugar'd speeches whisper'd in mine ear. Fairfax.

Who casts out threats, no man deceives,
But flattery still in sugar'd words betrays,
And poison in high-tast'd meats conveys. Denham.

SUGARCANDY. a. f. [from sugar and candy.] Sugar candied, or crystallized.

SUGGARY. adj. [from sugar.] Sweet; tasting of sugar.

With the sugg'ry sweet thereof allure,
Chaste ladies ears to phantasies impure. Spenser.

TO SUGGEST. v. a. [suggere, suggestum, Lat. suggester, Fr.]

1. To hint; to intimate; to insinuate good or ill; to tell privately.

Are you not ashamed?
What spirit suggests this imagination? Shakespeare.
I could never have suffered greater calamities, by denying to sign that justice my conscience suggested to me. King Charles.

These Hamish casuists speak peace to the consciences of men, by suggesting something to them, which shall satisfy their minds, notwithstanding a known, actual, avowed continuance of their sins. South.

Some ideas make themselves way, and are suggested to the mind by all the ways of sensation and reflexion. Locke.

Reflect upon the different state of the mind in thinking, which those influences of attention, reverie and dreaming, naturally enough suggest. Locke.

Search for some thoughts thy own suggesting mind,
And others dictated by heav'nly pow'r Shall rise spontaneous. Pope.

2. To seduce; to draw to ill by insinuation. Out of use.

When devils will their blackest sin put on,
They do suggest at first with heav'nly shows. Shakespeare.

Knowing that tender youth is soon suggested,
I mightily lodge her in an upper tover. Shakespeare.

3. To inform secretly. Out of use.

We must suggest the people, in what hatred
He still hath held them, that to 's power he would Have made them mules. Shakespeare.

SUGGESTER. n. f. [from suggest.] One that reminds another.

SUGGESTION. n. f. [suggestion, Fr. from suggest.]

1. Private hint; intimation; insinuation; secret notification.

It allayeth all base and earthly cogitations, banisheth and driveth away those evil secret sug- gestions which our invincible enemy is always apt to insinuate. Hooker.

He was a man
Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking Himself with princes; one that by suggestion
Tied all the kingdom. Shakespeare.

Native and untaught suggestions of inquisitive children. Locke.

On your suggestion. Shakespeare.
TO SUGGEST. v. a. [suggello, Lat.] To be black and blue; to make livid by a bruise.

The head of the ox humen was bruised, and remained suggested a long after. Wifman.

SUGGEST. n. f. [suggestum, Latin.]

1. Self-murder; the horrid crime of destroying one's self.

Child of despair, and I suggest my name. Savage.
To be cut off by the sword of injured friendship is the most dreadful of all deaths, next to suggest. Clarissa.

2. A self-murderer.

It late tobeams us, honey strikes the blow;
We make misfortunes, suggests in woe. Young.

SUGILLAGE. n. f. [souillage, Fr.] Drain of filth. Obsolete.

When they have chosen the plot, and laid out the limits of the work, some Italians dig wells and cisterns, and other conveyances for the sugillage of the house. Wotton.

SUGING. n. f. [This word seems to come from sue, to sweat, French; it is perhaps peculiar to Bacon.] The act of soaking through any thing.

Note the percolation or suing of the verjuice through the wood; for verjuice of itself would never have passed through the wood. Bacon.

SUIT. n. f. [suite, French.]

1. A set; a number of things corresponding one to the other.

Whole verses they deduc'd from those first golden times,
Of sundry toits of feet, and sundry suits of rhymes. Dryden.

We, ere the day, two suits of armour sought,
Which borne before him on his heed he brought. Dryden.

2. Clothes made one part to answer another.

What a heard of the general's cut, and a horrid suit of the camp, will do among foaming bottles, and ale-wash'd wies, is wonderful. Shakespeare.

For his device in handiworking a suit,
To judge of lace, pinks, pinks, pinks, cut and plait.
Of all the court to have the best conceit. Dowry.

Three or four suits one winter there does waste,
One suit does there three or four winters last. Cowley.

His majesty was supplied with three thousand suits of cloaths, with good proportions of shoes and stockings. Clarendon.

3. Consecration; series; regular order.

Every five and thirty years the same kind and suite of weather comes about again; as great frost, great wet, great droughts, warm winters, summers with little heat, and they call it the prime. Bacon.

4. Out of Suits. Having no correspondence. A metaphor, I suppose, from cards.

Wear this for me; one out of suits with fortune,
That would give more, but that her hand lacks means. Shakespeare.

5. [suite, Fr.] Retinue; company. Obsolete.

Plexirtus's ill led life, and worse-gotten honour, should have tumbled together to destruction, had there not come in Tydens and Telenor, with fifty in their suite to his defence. Sidney.

6. [from To sue.] A petition; an address of entreaty.

Mine ears against your suits are stronger than your gates against my force. Shakespeare.

She gallops o'er a courtier's nose;
And then dreams he of smelling out a suit. Shakespeare.

Had I a suit to Mr. Shallow, I would honour him men with the imputation of being near their master. Shakespeare.

Merry shall make suit unto thee. Shakespeare.
My mind, neither with pride's itch, nor yet with been

Poison'd with love to see or to be seen,
I had no suit there, nor new suit to view,
Yet went to court. Shakespeare.

It will be as unreasonable to expect that God should attend and grant those suits of ours, which we do not at all consider ourselves. De Witt.

7. Courtship.

He that hath the steerage of my coast,
Direct my suit. Shakespeare.

Then determinations are, to return to home, and to trouble you with no more suits, and you may be won by some other fort than your father's imposition. Shakespeare.

8. In Spenser it seems to signify private prosecution.

High amongst all knights hast hung thy sword
Thenceforth the suit of earthly conquest shone,
And wash thy hands from guilt of bloody toils. Spenser.

9. [In law.] Suit is sometimes put for the instance of a cause, and sometimes for the cause itself deduced in judgment.

All that had any suits in law came unto them. Shakespeare.

Wars are suits of appeal to the tribunal of God's justice, where there are no superiors on earth to determine the cause. Bacon.

Involve not thyself in the suits and parties of great personages. Taylor.

To Alberch alone refer your suit,
And let his sentence finish your dispute. Dryden.

A suit of law is not a thing unlawful in itself, but may be innocent, if nothing else comes in to make a sin thereof; but then it is our sin, and a matter of our account, when it is either upon an unjustifiable ground, or carried on by a sinful management. Kent.

John Hall was flattered by the lawyers that as suit would not last above a year, and that before that time he would be in quiet possession of his business. Arbutnot.

SUIT COVENANT. [In law.] Is where the ancestor of one man covenanted with the ancestor of another to sue at his court. Bacon.

SUIT COURT. [In law.] Is the court in which tenants owe attendance to their lord. Bacon.

SUIT SERVICE. [In law.] Attendance which tenants owe to the court of their lord. Bacon.

TO SUIT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fit; to adapt to something else.

Suit the action to the word, the word to the action, with this special observance, that you enter not the modesty of nature. Shakespeare.

The matter and manner of their tales, and of their telling, are to suit to their different educations and humours, that each would be improper on any other. Dryden.

2. To be fitted to; to become.

Compute the gains of his ungodly suit. Dryden.
Ill suits his cloth the praise of railing well. Dryden.

Her purple habit fits with such a grace
On her smooth shoulders, and to suit her face. Dryden.

If different sects should give us a list of those innate practical principles, they would let down only such as *suit*ed their distinct hypotheses. Locke.

3. To dress; to clothe.

Raise her notes to that sublime degree,
Which suits a song of piety and rage. Pope.

Such a Sebastian was my brother too,
So went he *suit*ed to his watery tomb:

If spirits can assume both form and suit,
You come to fright us. Shakespeare.

Be better suited;

These words are memories o' those misfortunes;
I prythee put them off to woful hours. Shaksp.

I'll disrobe me

Of these Italian words, and suit myself
As does a British peasant. Shakespeare.

To SUI. v. n. To agree; to accord.

Dispute suits it both with to and with.

The one interpose, the other still remains,
Can it well suit with either; but soon prove

It suits alive. Milton.

The place itself was suiting to his care,
Unearth and savage as the cruel fair. Dryden.

Try does with a noble nature suit Dryden.

Contrast does ill with love and beauty suit. Dryden.

This he says, because it suits with his hypothesis.

It proves it not. Locke.

Give me not an office
That suits with me to ill; thou know'st my temper. Addison.

SUITABLE. adj. [from suit.] Fitting;
according with; agreeable to: with to.

Through all those miseries, in both there appeared a kind of nobleness not suitable to that situation. Sidney.

What he did purpose, it was the pleasure of God that Solomon his son should perform, in manner suitable to their present and ancient state. Hooker.

To solemn acts of royalty and justice, their suitable ornaments are a beauty; are they only in religion a sin? Hooker.

It is very suitable to the principles of the Roman church; for why should not their science as well exercise be in an unknown tongue? Tillotson.

As the blessings of God upon his honest industry had been great, so he was not without intentions of making suitable returns in acts of charity. Atterb.

Exposition is the diet of thought, and still appears more decent, as more suitable;

A side conceit in pompous words express'd,
Is like a clown in regal purple dress'd. Pope.

It is as great an absurdity to suppose holy prayers and divine petitions without an holiness of life suitable to them, as to suppose an holy and devout life without prayers. Law.

SUITABLENESS. n. f. [from suitable.]
Fitsness; agreeableness.

In words and styles, suitableness makes them acceptable and effective. Glanville.

With ordinary minds, it is the suitableness, not the evidence of a truth that makes it to be yielded to, and it is seldom that any thing practically convinces a man that does not please him first. South.

He traces these sympathies and suitableness of nature that are the foundation of all true friendships, and by his providence brings persons to affected together. South.

Consider the laws themselves, and their suitable-ness or unsuitableness to those to whom they are given. Tillotson.

SUITABLY. adv. [from suitable.] Agreeably; according to.

Whoever speaks upon an occasion may take any text suitably thereto; and ought to speak
suitably to that text. South.

Some rank deity, whose filthy face
We suitably o'er thinking shables place. Dryden.

SUITOR. n. f. [from suit.]

1. One that sues; a petitioner; a suppli-cant.

As humility is in suitors a decent virtue, so the testification thereof, by such effectual acknowledgments, not only argueth a sound apprehension of his supereminent glory and majesty before whom he stands, but putteth also into his hands a kind of pledge or bond for security against our unthankfulness. Hooker.

She hath been a suitor to me for her brother,
Cut off by course of justice. Shakespeare.

My pious soul began the wretchedness
Of suitors at court to mourn. Danvers.

Not only bind thine own hands, but bind the hands of suitors also from offering. Bacon.

Yet their port

Not of mean suitors; nor important left Secund their petition, than when the ancient pair,
Deucalion and chaste Pyrrha, to reforme
The race of mankind drown'd, before the flame
Of Themis flood devout. Milton.

I challenge nothing;
But I'm an humble suitor for the prisoners. Danvers.

My lord, I come an humble suitor to you. Rowe.

2. A wooer; one who courts a mistress.

I would I could find in my heart that I had a hard heart; for truly I love none.

—A dear happiness to women: they would else have been troubled with a pernicious suitor. Shaksp.

He pass'd a year under the countess of his mother, and then became a suitor to Mr. Roger Alston's daughter. Milton.

By many suitors sought, she mock'd their pains,
And still her vow'd virginity maintained. Dryden.

He drew his tent, tumbling, to his side,
Far from the suitor train, about it stood. Pope.

SUITRESS. n. f. [from suit.] A female suppliant.

'Twere pity
That could refuse a boon to such a suitress;

I have got a noble friend to be your advocate. Rowe.

SULCATED. adj. [sulcus, Lat.] Furrowed.

All are much chopp'd and sulcated by having lam exposed on the top of the clay to the weather, and to the erosion of the vitriolic matter caused amongst the clay. Woodward.

SULL. n. f. A plough.

SULLEN. adj. [Of this word the etymology is obscure.]

every day grew more intolent. Clarendon.

A man in a jail is sullen and out of humour at his first coming in. L. Strange.

For'd by my pride, I my concern suppress'd,
Pretended drowsiness, and with of rest,
And sullen I forgot the imperfect rest. Pope.

If we sit down sullen and inactive, in expectation that God should do all, we shall find ourselves miserably deceived. Rogers.

2. Mischievous; malignant.

Such sullen planets at my birth did shine,
They threaten every fortune mixt with mine. Dryden.

The sullen bend her sounding wings display'd, Unwilling left the night, and sought the mother
flode. Dryden.

3. Intractable; obstinate.

Things are as sullen as we are, and will be what they are, whatever we think of them. Tillotson.

4. Gloomily; dark; cloudy; dismal.

Why are thine eyes fixt to the sullen earth,
Gazing at that which seems to dim thy sight? Shakespeare.

Night with her sullen wings to double shade,
The debate laws in their clay cells were couch'd,
And now wild beasts came forth the woods to rove. Milton.

A glimpse of moon-shine, streak'd with red;
A dusky, sullen, and uncertain light,
That dances through the clouds, and thus beguile. Dryden.

No cheerful breeze this sullen region knows,
The dreaded east is all the wind that blows. Pope.

5. Heavy; dull; forlornful.

Be thou the trumpet of our wrath,
And sullen pursue not your own decay. Shakespeare.

SULLENLY. adv. [from sullen.] Gloomily; malignantly; intractably.

To say they are troubled without the assistance of some principle that has wisdom in it, and come to pass from chance, is sullenly to assert a thing because we will assert it. Mor.

He in chains demanded more
Than he impos'd in victory before;
He sullenly reply'd, he could not make These offers now. Dryden.

The general mends his weary pace,
And sullenly to his revenge he sails;
So glides some trodden serpent on the grass,
And long behind his wounded volume trails. Dryd.

SULLENNESS. n. f. [from sullen.] Gloomi-ness; moroseness; sullenly anger; malignity; intractability.

Speech being as rare as precious, her silence without sullenness, her modesty without affectation, and her amenability without ignorance. Sidney.

To fit my sullenness,
He to mother key his byk dash'd thro's. Danvers.

In those venal times, when the air is calm and pleasant, it were an injury to sullenness against nature, not to count and see her riches. Milton.

Q. It is not the sound out of my hypocrisy, sullen-ness, or imposture, but out of a sincere love of true knowledge and virtue. Mor.

With their comforts about me, and sullenness enough to do me harm, sullenness came to be me. Temple.

SULLENLY. n. f. [without singular.] Morose temper; gloominess of mind. A burlesque word.

And statues sully'd yet with sacrilegious smoke. Roscommon.

He's dead, whose love had sully'd all your religion,
And made you emperors of the world in vain. Dryden.

Looking years shall weep their sully'd face,
Chang'd with all omens, sully'd with disgrace. Prior.

Publick justice may be done to those virtues then humanity took care to conceal, which were sully'd by the calumnies and slanders of malicious men. Nelson.

Let there be no spots to sully the brightness of this humanity. Atterbury.

Ye walkers too, that youthful colours wear,
Thine sully'd cheeks say of with equal care,
The little chimney sweeper stalks along,
And marks with busy fumes the heedless throng. Gray.

SULLY. n. f. [from the verb.] Soil; tarnish; spot.

You begin, the light sully on my son,
As 'twere a thing a little soil'd in the working. Shakespeare.

Must render up myself. Shakespeare.

Dart and javelin, stones and sulphurous fire. Atterbury.

Is not the strength and vigour of the action between light and sulphurous bodies, observed above, one reason why sulphurous bodies take fire more readily, and burn more vehemently, than other bodies do? Newton.

The fury heard, while on Cocytus' bank
Her lakes unty'd sulphurous waters drank. Pope.

SUM

No sulphurous glooms
Swell'd in the sky, and lent the lightning forth.

or factry.] Hot without ventilation;
hot and close; hot and cloudy.
It is very sultry and hot. Shaksp.

The sultry breath
Of tainted air had clod'd the jaws of death Sandys
Such as, born beneath the burning sky
And sultry sun, betwixt the tropicks lie. Dryden.
Our foe advances on us,
And envies us ev'n Lybia's sultry deserts. Addison Then would sultry heats and a burning air have scorch'd and chapp'd the earth, and galled the animal tribes in houses or dens. Chapman.

SUM. n. f. [summa, Latin; somme, Fr.]
1. The whole of any thing; many particulars aggregated to a total.

We may as well conclude so of every sentence,
as of the whole sum and body thereof. Hacker.
How precious are thy thoughts unto me, O God!
how great is the sum of them! Psalms.
Th' almighty Father, where he sits Shr'd in his sanctuary of heav'n's secure,
Consulting on the sum of things, foresees
This tumult, and permitted all, advis'd. Milton.
Such and no less is he, on whom depends
The sum of things. Dryden.
Weighing the sum of things with wife forecud,
Solituous of publick good. Philips.

2. Quantity of money.
I did lend to you

As ample sums as Rome in Cæsar's days. C. Arbuthnot.

3. [somme, Fr.] Compendium; abridgment; the whole abstracted.

Thus, in effect, is the sum and substance of that which they bring by way of opposition against those orders which we have common with the church of Rome. Hacker.
They replumb'd the hearts of the mortal into them with words of memorable consolation, strengthened men in the fear of God, gave them wholesome instructions of life, and comforted them in true religion: in sum, they taught the world no less virtuously how to die, than they had done before how to live. Hacker.

This having learn'd, thou hast attain'd the sum
Of wisdom. Milton.
In sum, no man can have a greater veneration for Chaucer than myself. Dryden.

SUM

Thy sum of duty let two words contain;
Be humble, and be just. Prior.
In sum, the gospel, considered as a law, prescribes every virtue to our conduct, and forbids every sin. Rogers.

4. The amount; the result of reasoning or computation.

I appeal to the readers, whether the sum of what I have said be not this. Tillotson.

5. Height; completion.

And sum'd th' account of chance. Shaksp.
The high priest may sum the silver brought in.
2 Kings.

In sickness, time will seem longer without a clock than with it; for the mind doth value every moment, and then the hour doth rather sum up the moments than divide the day. Bacon.

He that would reckon up all the accidents pre-terments depend upon, may as well undertake to count the sands, or sum up infinity. South.

2. To compile; to comprehend; to collect into a narrow compass.
So lovely fair!

That what seem'd fair in all the world, seem'd now
Mean, or in her sum'd up, in her contain'd.
Milton.

To conclude, by summing up what I would try concerning what I have, and what I have not been, in the following paper I shall not deny, that I pretended not to write in accurate treatise of colours, but an occasional essay. Boyle.

"Go to the unt, thou sluggard," in few words,
sums up the moral of this fable. W. Strange.

This Atlas must our sinking state uphold;
In council cool, but in performance bold.

He sums their virtues in himself alone, Dryden.
And adds the greatest, of a loyal son.

As is the oozy bottom of the sea
With sunken wreck and sumless treasures. Shaksp.
A sumless journey of uncorrupt speed. Milton.
Above, beneath, around the palace shines
The sumless treasure of exhauled mines. Pope.

SUMMARILY. adv. [from summary.]
Briefly; the shortest way.

The decalogue of Moses declareth summarily those things which we ought to do; the prayer of our Lord, whatsoever we should request or desire.

While we labour for these demonstrations out of scripture, and do summarily declare the things which many ways have been spoken, be contented quietly to hear, and do not think my speech tedious.
Hacker.

When the parties proceed summarily, and they choose the ordinary way of proceeding, the cause is made plenary. Ayliffe.

SUMMARY. adj. [sommaire, Fr. from sum.] Short; brief; compendious.

The judge
Directed them to mind their brief,
Not spend their time to shew their reading;
Sho'd have a summary proceeding. Swift

SUM

SUMMARY. n. f. [from the adjective.]
Compendium; abstract; abridgment.

We are enforc'd from our most quiet sphere
By the rough torrent of occasion;
And have the summary of all our griefs,
When time shall serve, to shew in articles. Shaksp.
In that comprehensive summary of our duty to God, there is no express mention thereof. Rogers.
SUMMER. n. f. [summer, Saxon; junier,
Dutch.]

1. The season in which the sun arrives at the luther solstice.

Sometimes bath the brightest day a cloud,
And, after summer, even more succeeds
The barren winter with his nipping cold. Shaksp.
Can't such things be,

And overcome us like a summer's cloud,
Without our special wonder? Shaksp.

An hundred of summer fruits 2 Sam.
He was sitting in a summer parlour. John.
In all the herries deckt of summer's pride. Shaksp.
They mail and sow it with wheat, giving it a summer following till and next year sow it was peace. Montrose.

Dry weather is best for most summer corn. Mo.

flies at Bartholomew-tide, blind, though they have their eyes. Shaksp.

SUMMERHOUSE. n. f. [from summer and house.] An apartment in a garden used in the summer.

I'd rather live
With cheese and garlick, in a windmill, far,
Than feed on cates, and have sun talk to me,
In any summerhouse in christendom. Shaksp.
With here a fountain never to be play'd;
And there a summerhouse that knows no shade. Pope.
There is so much virtue in eight volumes of Summators, such a reverence of things sacred, so many valuable remarks for our conduct in life, that they are not improper to be in parlours or summerhouses to entertain our thoughts in any moments of leisure. Harris.

SUMMERBALT. n. f. [sunbrefault, Fr.]
SUMMERSET. } Soma is a corruption.] A high leap in which the bees have seen him do the summer set upon a truncheon fixed on the rope, which is no thicker than a common packthread. S. B.

SUMMIT. n. f. [summitas, Lat.] The top; the utmost height.

Have I fall'n or no?
—From the dread summit of this chalky boun!
Look up a height, the drill-gorg'd lark so far
Cannot be seen or heard. Shaksp.

Sun's heat, that makes the summit glow,
Enriches all the vales below. Swift.
To SUMMON. v. a. [summoneo, Lat.]
1. To call with authority; to admonish to appear: to cite.

Caterby, found lord Hastings,
And summon him to-morrow to the Tower. Shaksp.
The course of method summon me to discontinue of the inhabitants. Carew.
The nation is debilitated by the governor of the city where the feast is celebrated, and all the persons of both sexes are summoned to attend. Bacon.
Rely on what thou hast of virtue, summon all.
Milton.

Nor trumpets summon him to war,
Nor drums disturb his morning sleep. Dryden.
We are summoned in to profess repentance and amendment of all our sins. Kettlewell.

Love, duty, safety, summon us away;
To nature's voice, and nature we obey. Pope.
2. To excite; to call up; to raise: with up exhortative.

When the blast of war blows in our ears,
Summon the fire, summon up the blood. Shaksp.

SUPERIORITY. n. f. [from superior.] Preeminence; the quality of being greater or higher than another in any respect.

De thumme makes the formal act of adoration to be subjection to a superior; but he makes the mere apprehension of excellency to include the formal reason of it: whereas, mere excellency without superiority doth not require any subjection, but only estimation. Stillington.

The person who advises, does in that particular exercise a superiority over us, thinking us defective in our conduct or understanding. Spectator.

SUPERIOUR. adj. [supérieur, French; superior, Latin.]

1. Higher; greater in dignity or excellence; preferable or preferred to another.

In commanding another, you do yourself right; for he that you command is either superior to you in that you command, or inferior: if he be inferior, if he be to be commended, you much more: if he be superior, if he be not to be commended, you much less glorious. Bacon.

Although superior to the people, yet not superior to their own voluntary engagements once joined to them. Taylor.

Heaven takes part with the oppressed, and tyrants are upon their behaviour to a superior power. 1. Strange.

Superior beings above us, who enjoy perfect happiness, are more steadily determined in their choice of good than we, and yet they are not less happy or less free than we are. Locke.

He laughs at men of far superior understandings to his, for not being as well dressed as himself. Swift.

2. Upper; higher locally.

By the refraction of the second prism, the breadth of the image was not increased; but its superior part, which in the first prism suffered the greater refraction, and appeared violet and blue, did again in the second prism suffer a greater refraction than its inferior part, which appeared red and yellow. Newton.

3. Free from emotion or concern; unconquered; unaffected.

From amidst them forth he pass'd,
Long way through hostile scorn; which he felt, and Superior, nor of violence fear'd ought. Atter.

Here passion first I felt,
Commotion strange! in all enjoyments else
Superior and unmoved. Milton.

There is not in earth a spectacle more worthy than a great man superior to his sufferings. Spectator.

SUPERIOUR. n. f. One more excellent or dignified than another.

Those under the great officers of state have more frequent opportunities for the exercise of benevolence than their superiours. Spectator.

SUPERLATION. n. f. [superlatio, Latin.] Exaltation of any thing beyond truth or propriety.

There are words that as much raise a style as others can depress it; superlation and ornament's amplifies; it may be above truth, but not above a mean. Ben Jonson.

SUPERLATIVE. adj. [superlatif, Latin.]

1. Implying or expressing the highest degree.

It is an usual way to give the superlative things of eminence; and, when a thing is very great, presently to define it to be the greatest of all. Bacon.

Some have a violent and turgid manner of talking and thinking; they are always in exclamation and pronounce concerning every thing in the superlative. Watts.

2. Relating to the highest degree.

The high court of parliament in England a superlative. Bacon.

Martyrdoms I reckon amongst miracles; because they seem to exceed the strength of human nature; and I may do the like of superlative and admirable holiness. Bacon.

The generality of its reception is with many the perfluency argument of its superlative desert, and common judges measure excellency by numbers. Glanville.

Ingratitude and compassion never cohabit in the same breast; which shows the superlative nature of this vice, and the baseness of the mind in which it dwells. South.

SUPERLATIVELY. adv. [from superlative.]

1. In a manner of speech expressing the highest degree.

I shall not speak superlatively of them, but I may truly say, they are second to none in the christian world. Furze.

2. In the highest degree.

Tiberius was bad enough in his youth, but superlatively and monstrously so in his old age. South.

The Supreme Being is a spirit most excellent, glorious, superlatively powerful, wise and good Creator of all things. Bentley.

SUPERLATIVENESS. n. f. [from superlative.] The state of being in the highest degree.

SUPERLUNAL. adj. [superlunus, Latin.]

1. Having a higher position; locally above us.

By heaven and earth was meant the solid matter and substance, as well of all the heavens and orbs superlunary, as of the globe of the earth and waters which covered it. Boyle.

2. Relating to things above; placed above celestial; heavenly.

That supernal Judge that tries good thoughts
In any breath of strong authority,
To look into the blots and stains of right. Shakspeare

He with frequent intercourse
Thither will send his winged messengers,
On errands of supernal grace. Milton
Both glorying to have 'scap'd the Stygian flood,
As gods, and by their own recover'd strength,
Not by the influence of supernal power. Milton

SUPERNATANT. adj. [supernatans, Latin.] Swimming above.
Whilst the substance continued fluid, I could float it with the supernatant menstruum, without making between them any true union. Boyle

SUPERNATION. n. f. [from supernatus, Lat.] The act of swimming on the top of any thing.

Touching the supernation of bodies, take of aquafortis two ounces, of quicksilver two drams, the dissolution will not bear a float as big as a nutmeg. Bacon

Bodies are differentiated by supernation, as floating on water; for crystal will sink in water, as carrying in its own bulk a greater ponderosity than the space of any water it doth occupy, and will therefore only swim in molten metal, and quicksilver.
Bacon

SUPERNATURAL. adj. [super and natura- l.] Being above the powers of nature.
There remaineth either no way unto salvation, or,
if any, then surely a way which is supernatural, a way which could never have entered into the heart of a man, as much as once to conceive or imagine, if God himself had not revealed it; extraordinarily, in which sense we term it the mystery or secret way of salvation. Hooker

When supernatural duties are necessarily exacted, natural are not rejected as needless. Hooker
The understanding is secured by the perfection of its own nature, or by supernatural assistance. Tillotson

No man can give any rational account how it is possible that such a general flood should come, by any natural means. And if it be supernatural, that grants the thing I am proving, namely, such a supreme being as can alter the course of nature.
Hobbes

What mira of providence are these,
Through which we cannot see?
's saints by supernatural power set free
Are left at last in martyrdom to die. Dryden

SUPERNATURALLY. adv. [from super- natural.] In a manner above the course of power of nature.

The Son of God came to do every thing in miracle, to have supernaturally, and to pardon infinitely, to lay down the Sovereign while he assumed the servant. South

SUPERNUMERARY. adj. [supernumeraire, Fr. super and numerus, Lat.] Being above a stated, a necessary, an usual, or a round number.

Well it thrown out, as supernumerary
To my just number count. Milton

In sixty-three years there may be lost eighteen days, omitting the intercalation of one day every fourth year, allowed for this quadrant or six hours
supernumerary. Bacon

The odd or supernumerary six hours are not accounted in the three years after the leap year.
Haller

Besides occasional and supernumerary addresses,
Diamond's certain perpetual returns exceeded
David's seven times a day. Fell

The produce of this tax is adequate to the service for which it is designed, and the additional tax is proportioned to the supernumerary expence of year. Addison

Antiochus began to augment his fleet; but the Roman senate ordered his supernumerary vessels to be sold. Arbutnot

A supernumerary canon is one who does not receive any of the profits or emoluments of the church, but only lives and serves there on a future expectation of some preferment. Ayliffe

know not which is which. Shakspeare

No superfcriptions of time,
Of honour or good name. Suckling

I learn of my experience, not by talk.
How counteracted a coin they are who friends
Be in their superfcription; in prosperous days
They swim, but in adverse withdraw their head.
Milton

It is enough her fame
May honour'd be with superfcription
Of the sole lady, who had power to move
The great Northumberland. Walt

To SUPERSEDE. v. a. [super and sedeo, Lat.] To make void or inoperative by superior power; to set aside.

Patience is the shankennet of the hand, and therefore must pretend workings not controllable by reason, for as much as the proper effect of it is, for the time, to superse the workings of reason.
South

In this genuine acceptance of chance, nothing is forgotten that can superse the known laws of natural motion. Bentley

SUPERSEDEAS. n. f. [In law.]

A writ which lies in divers and sundry cases, in all which it signifies a command or request to stay or forbear the doing of that which in appearance of law were to be done, were it not for the cause whereupon the writ is granted. For example, a man regularly is to have surety of peace against him of whom he will swear that he is sound; and the justice required hereunto cannot stay him, yet if the party be formerly bound to the peace, in chancery or elsewhere, this writ lieth to stay the justice from doing that, which otherwise he might not deny.
Cowell

The far distance of this county from the court hath afforded it a superse from takers and pur-veyours. Curew

SUPERSTICABLE. adj. [super and sticabile.] Overstiffness; more than is necessary or required.

A glass supersticable final at logic. Shakspeare

SUPERSTITION. n. f. [superstition, Fr.
superstition, Latin.]

Among the trees, even then post old the twains.
Pope

2. Rite or practice proceeding from scrupulous or timorous religion. In this sense it is plural.

They the truth
With superstition and traditions haunt. Milton

If we had a religion that confined in itself su- perstitions, that had no regard to the perfection of our nature, people might well be said to have some part of their life devoted to it. Law

3. False religion; reverence of beings not proper objects of reverence; false worship.

They had certain questions against him of their

mory of all others we most adore, not superstitiously
but as a divine instrument. Bacon

2. With too much care.

No sort of these methods should be too scrupulous, and superstitiously pursued. Watts

To SUPERSTRAIN. v. a. [super and strain.] To strain beyond the just stretch.

In the straining of a string, the further it is pressed, the less superstraining goeth to a note.
Bacon

To SUPERSTRUCT. v. a. [superstruo, superstructas, Lat.] To build upon any thing.

Two notions of fundamentum may be conceived, one signifying that whereon our eternal bliss is immediately superstructed, the other whereon our obedience to the faith of Christ is founded.

Hammond

If his habit of sin have not corrupted his super- struct, the vicious christian may think it reasonable to reform, and the preacher may hope to superstruct good life upon such a foundation. Hammond

This is the only proper basis on which to super- struct first innocency, and then virtue.

Decay of Piety

SUPERSTITION, n. f. [from super-struct.] An edifice raised on any thing.

I want not to improve the honour of the living, by improving that of the dead; and my own profession hath taught me not to erect new superstitions upon an old ruin. Dequand

SUPERSTITIOUS, adj. [from superstitious.] Built upon something else.

He that is so sure of his particular election, as to resolve he can never fall, mistakes his body in love; that what were darkness in an eye, is not to be hung; and nothing but the removing of the darkness and error can draw him from the superstitious life, be a never to profit. Hawes and

SUPERSTITION, n. f. [from super and stitione.] That which is raised or built upon something else.

He who builds upon the present, build is upon the narrow compass of a point; and when the building is so narrow, the superstition cannot be high and strong too. Scott

Purgatory was not known in the primitive church, and is a superstition upon the Christian religion. Lockton

You have a life to your natural endowment at the superstitions of study. Doddon

SUPERSTITION, n. f. [from super and stitione.] More than substantial.

SUPERVACUOUS, adj. [from super and vacuus.] Superfluous; needless; unnecessary; serving to no purpose. Dick.

The stones

Did first the rigour of their kind expel,

And suppled into softness as they fell. Dryden

SUPPLEMENT, n. f. [from supplementum.]

1. Addition to any thing by which its defects are supplied.

Unto the word of God, being in respect of that end for which God ordained it, perfect, exact, and absolute in itself, we do not add reason as a supplement of any man or defect therein, but as a necessary instrument, without which we could not reach by the scriptures perfection that fruit and benefit which it yieldeth.

His blood will atone for our imperfection, his righteousness be imputed in supplement to what is lacking in ours.

Instructive satire, true to virtue's cause! Young.

From thence supplement of public laws! Young.

2. Sore; supple. Not in use.

We had not spent

Our riddle wine a sup-board; supplement

Of large bounty each man to his vessel drew. Chapman.

SUPPLEMENTAL. } adj. [from supple-

Dryden.

Spare this life; and hear thy suppliant's prayer

Dryden.

SUPPLICANT. n. f. [from supplicare.] One that entreats or implores with great submission; an humble petitioner.

The prince and people of Nineveh assembling themselves a man army of supplicants, God did not withstand them. Hooker.

The wise suppliant, though he prayed for the condition he thought most desirable, yet left the event to God. Rogers

Abraham, instead of indulging the suppliant in his desire of new evidence, refers him to what his brethren had.

To SUPPLICATE. v. n. [supplicare, Fr.

supplicare, Latin, from supplicare.] To implore; to entreat; to petition submissively and humbly.

Many things a man cannot with any comeliness say or do; a man cannot brook to supplicate a beg. Bacon

Thither the kingdoms and the nations come,

In supplicating crowds, to learn their doom.

Adrian

SUPPLICATION. n. f. [supplication, Fr.

from supplicare.]

1. Petition humbly delivered; entreaty.

My lord protecta will come this way by a lady and then we may deliver our supplications in the quill. Shakspeare

My mother bows,

As if Olympus to a mole-hill should

In supplication nod. Shakspeare

2. Petitionary worship; the adoration of a suppliant or petitioner.

Paying with all prayer and supplication, with all perseverance and supplication for all saints.

1 Peter.

Bend thine ear

To supplication, hear his sighs though mute.

Milton

A second sort of public prayer is, that all in a family that are members of it join in their common supplications. Duty of Man

These prove the common practice of the worship of images in the Roman church, as to the rites of supplication and adoration, to be as extravagant as among the heathens. Stillinger.

We should testify our dependence upon God,

and our confidence of his goodness, by constant prayers and supplications for mercy. Talbot.

To SUPPLY. v. a. [suppleo, Lat. supplere,

French.]

1. To fill up as any deficiencies happen.

Out of the fry of these raskell boys are their kerns supplied and maintained. Spenser.

2. To give something wanted; to yield;

to afford.

They were princes that had wives, sons, and nephews; and yet all these could not supply the comfort of friendship. Bacon.

I wanted nothing fortune could supply

Nor did the flatterer tell that hour decay. Dryden.

3. To relieve with something wanted.

Although I neither lend nor borrow,

Yet, to supply the ripe wants of my friend,

I'll break a custom. Shakspeare.

4. To serve instead of.

Burning ships the handi'd sun supply,

And no light shines but that by which men die.

Gray.

5. To give or bring, whether good or bad.

Nearer can supply

Sighs to my breath, and tears to my eyes. Prior

6. To fill any room made vacant.

Upland creatures to supply our vacant room

Milton.

The sun was set; and Vesper, to supply

His absent beams, had lighted up the sky.

Dryden.

7. To accommodate; to furnish.

While tries the moon on tops with shades supply

Your honour, name, and pride shall never die.

Dryden.

The reception of light must be supplied by some open form of the fabric.

My lover, turning away several old servants, supplied me with others from his own house. Swift.

SUPPLY. n. f. [from the verb.] Relief of want; cure of deficiencies.

I mean that now your abundance may be a supply for their want, that their abundance also may be a supply for your want. 2 Corinthians.

Art from that land each just supply provides,

Works without show, and without pomp provides.

Pope.

To SUPPORT. v. a. [supporter, Fr. sup-

portare, Italian.]

1. To sustain; to prop; to bear up.

Stooping to support each flow'r of tender stalk.

Milton.

The pulchre built by Paus, vast and proud,

Supported by a hundred pillars stood. Dryden.

The original community of all things appearing from this donation of God; the sovereignty of Adam, built upon his private dominion, must fall, not having any foundation to support it. Locke.

2. To endure any thing painful without being overcome.

Strongly to endure and support our pains. Milton.

Could it then support that burden? Milton.

This force of action, and less influence,

The patience of a god could not support. Dryden.

3. To endure; to bear.

She scarce awake her eyes could keep,

Unable to support the times of sleep. Dryden.

None can support a diet of flesh and water without acid, vinegar, and bread, without falling into a putrid fever. Arbuthnot.

4. To sustain; to keep from fainting.

With mixed consolations recompens'd,

And out supported. Milton.

SUPPORT. n. f. [support, French, from the verb.]

1. Act or power of sustaining.

Though the idea we have of a horse or stone be but the collection of those several sensible qualities which we find united in them, yet, because we cannot conceive how they should subsist alone, we suppose them existing in and supported by some common subject, which support we denote by the name substance, though it be certain we have no clear idea of that support. Locke.

2. Prop; sustaining power.

3. Necessaries of life.

4. Maintenance; supply.

SUPPORTABLE. adj. [supportable, Fr. from support.] Tolerable; to be endured.

It may be observed that Shakspeare accepts the full syllable.

As great to me, as late, and, supportable

To make the dear loss, have I means much weaker

Then you may call to comfort you. Shakspeare.

Allegations in the project of uniting christians might be very supportable, as things in their own nature are tolerable. Swift.

I wish that whatever part of misfortunes they must bear, may be rendered supportable to them.

Pope

SUPPORTABLENESS. n. f. [from supporta-

ble.] The state of being tolerable.

SUPPORTANCE. } n. f. [from support.]

SUPPORTATION. } Maintenance; support. Both these words are obsolete.

Give him supportance to the bending twigs

Shakspeare

His quarrel he hardly scarce worth talking of,

therefore draw for the supportance of his vow.

Shakspeare.

The benighted subject should render some small portion of his gain, for the supportation of the king's expence. Bacon.

SUPPORTER. n. f. [from support.]

1. One that supports.

You must walk by us upon either hand,

And good supporters are you. Shakspeare.

But such a relation cannot be founded in nothing, and the thing here related as a supporter, or a support is not repeated to the mind by any distinct idea. Locke.

2. Prop; that by which any thing is born up from falling.

More might be added of beams, crests, muntins, and supporters. Camden.

The brackets and supporters of flowers are figured.

Lucan.

We shall be discharged of our bad, but you that are designed for beams and supporters, shall bear.

Le Plongeur.

There is no loss of room at the bottom, as the reis in a building set upon supporters. Metastasio.

3. Sustainer; comforter.

The saints have a companion and supporter in all their miseries. South.

4. Maintainer; defender.

The beginning of the earl of Essex I most attribute in great part to my lord of Leicester; but yet as an introducer or supporter, not as a teacher. Watson.

Such propositions as these are competent to blast and defend any cause which requires such aids, and stands in need of such supporters. Hammond.

All examples represent ingratitude as sitting in its throne, with pride at its right hand, and cruelty at its left; worthy supporters of such a reigning iniquity. South.

Love was no more, when loyalty was gone, The great supporter of his awful throne. Dryden.

5. Supporters. [In heraldry.] Beasts that support the arms.SUPPOSABLE. adj. [from supposé.] That may be supposed.

Invincible ignorance is, in the far greatest number of men, ready to be confronted against the necessity of their believing all the fables of any supposable catalogue. Hammond.

SUPPOSAL. n. f. [from supposé.] Position without proof; imagination; belief.

Young Fortinbras, Holding a weak supposal of our worth, Thinks our state to be out of flame. Shakespeare.

Little can be looked for towards the advancement of natural theory, but from those that are likely to mend our prospect; the defect of events, and sensible appearances, suffer us to proceed no further towards science, than to imperfect guesses and timorous supposals. Glanville.

When this comes, our former supposal of sufficient grace, as of the preaching of the word, and God's calls, is utterly at an end. Hammond.

Interest, with a Jew, never proceeds but upon supposal at least of a firm and sufficient bottom. South.

Artful men endeavour to entangle thoughtless women by bold supposals and offers. Clarissa.

TO SUPPOSE. v. a. [supposer, Fr. suppono, Latin.]

1. To lay down without proof; to advance by way of argument or illustration, without maintaining the truth of the position.

Where we meet with all the indications and evidences of such a thing, as the thing is capable of, supposing it to be true, it must needs be very irrational to make any doubt of it. Hobbes.

2. To admit without proof.

This is to be entertained as a firm principle, that when we have as great assurance that a thing is, as we could possibly, supposing it were, we ought not to make any doubt of its existence. Tillotson.

Suppose some to neglect that they will not be brought to learn by gentle ways, yet it does not thence follow that the rough discipline of the cudgel is to be used to all. Locke.

3. To imagine; to believe without examination.

Tell false Edward, thy supposed king, That Lewis of France is lending over markers. Shakespeare.

Let not my lord suppose that they have slain all the king's sons; for Amnon only is slain. Samuel.

I suppose we should compel them to a quick result. Milton.

4. To require as previous.

This supposeth something, without evident ground. Hale.

5. To make reasonably supposed.

One falsehood always supposes another, and renders all you can say suspected. Female Quixote.

6. To put one thing by fraud in the place of another.

SUPPOSE. n. f. [from the verb.] Supposition; position without proof; unevincenced conceit.

We come short of our supposes so far, That, after sev'n years' siege, yet Troy-walls stand. Shakespeare.

Is Egypt's safety, and the king's, and your's, Fit to be confided on a bare suppose That he is honest. Dryden.

SUPPOSER. n. f. [from supposé.] One that supposes.

Thou hast by marriage made thy daughter mine, While counterfeit supposers blur'd thine eye. Shakespeare.

SUPPOSITION. n. f. [supposition, Fr. from supposé.] Position laid down; hypothesis; imagination yet unproved.

In saying he is a good man, understand me that he is sufficient; yet his means are in supposition. Shakespeare.

Sing, Cyren, for thyself, and I will date; Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hairs, And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lye; And in that glorious supposition think He gains by death, that hath such means to die. Shakespeare.

This is only an infallibility upon supposition, that if a thing be true, it is impossible to be false. Tillotson.

Such an original irresistible notion is neither requisite upon supposition of a deity, nor is it pretended to by religion. Bentley.

SUPPOSITIOUS. adj. [from suppositus, suppositivus, Latin.]

1. Not genuine; put by a trick into the place or character belonging to another. The defraction of Mithapha was so fatal to Solyman's line, as the succession of the Turks from Solyman is suspected to be of strange blood; for that Selymus it was thought to be supposititious. Bacon.

It is their opinion, that no man ever killed his father; but that, if it should ever happen, the reputed son must have been illegitimate, supposititious, or begotten in adultery. Addison.

There is a Latin treatise among the supposititious pieces, attributed to Athanasius. Waterland.

2. Supposed; imaginary; not real.

Some alterations in the globe tend rather to the benefit of the earth, and its productions, than their destruction, as all these supposititious ones manifestly would do. Woodward.

SUPPOSITIOUSNESS. n. f. [from suppositivus.] State of being counterfeit.

SUPPOSITIVELY. adv. [from supposé.] Upon supposition.

The unformed sinner may have some hope suppositively, if he do change and repent; the honest penitent may hope positively. Hammond.

SUPPOSITORY. n. f. [suppositoire, French; suppositorium, Latin.] A kind of solid clyster.

Nothing relieves the head more than the piles; therefore suppositories of honey, aloes, and rock-salt ought to be tried. Arbutnot.

TO SUPPRESS. v. a. [supprimo, supprimo, Fr.]

1. To crush; to overpower; to overwhelm; to subdue; to reduce from any state of activity or commission.

Sh'ere would have honour out of the Tower, To crown himself king, and suppress the prince. Shakespeare.

Every rebellion, when it is suppressed, doth make the subject weaker, and the prince stronger. Davies.

Sir William Herbert, with a well armed and ordered company, set sharply upon them; and, oppressing some of the forwardest of them by death, suppressed the residue by fear. Hayward.

2. To conceal; not to tell; not to reveal.

Times not-revealed, which th' invisible King, Only omniscient, hath suppressed in night. Milton.

Still the suppressor the name, and this keeps him in a pleasing suspense; and, in the very close of her speech, he indirectly mentions it. Broome.

3. To keep in; not to let out.

Well did'st thou, Richard, to suppress thy voice For, had the passions of thy heart burst out, I fear we should have seen decyph'ed there More ranc'rous spight, more furious raging lines. Shakespeare.

SUPPRESSION. n. f. [suppression, Fr. suppressio, Lat. from suppressis.]

1. The act of suppressing.

2. Not publication. You may depend upon a suppression of these verses. Pope.

SUPPRESSOR. n. f. [from suppressis.] One that suppresses, crushes, or conceals.

TO SUPPURATE. v. a. [from pus pus, Lat. suppurar, Fr.] To generate pus or matter.

This disease is generally fatal; if it suppurates, the pus, it is evacuated into the lower belly, where it produceth putrefaction. Arbutnot.

TO SUPPURATE. v. n. To grow to pus.

SUPPURATION. n. f. [suppuratio, Fr. from suppurare.]

1. The ripening or change of the matter of a tumour into pus.

If the inflammation be gone too far towards suppuration, then it must be promoted with suppuratives, and opened by incision. Herman.

This great attention must produce a great propensity to the putrescent alkaline condition of the fluids, and consequently to suppurations. Arbutnot.

2. The matter suppurated.

The great physician of souls sometimes came to me without coming in; for he has suffered, I would say, and he must labour the supposition, to let out death with the suppurations. South.

SUPPURATIVE. adj. [suppuratif, French; from suppurare.] Digestive; generating matter.

SUPPUTATION. n. f. [supputatio, French; supputo, Latin.] Reckoning; account; calculation; computation.

From these differing properties of day and night arise difficulties in carrying on and reconciling the supputation of time in long measures. Hale.

The Jews saw every day their Messiah in the doctors, about his speedy manifestations, were that the predictions of the prophets, whom they could now no longer understand, were covered in obscurity, that all the supputations of time were terminated in Jesus Christ, or were without period. Hale.

TO SUPPUTE. v. a. [from supputo, Latin.] To reckon; to calculate.

SUPRA. [Lat.] In composition, signifies above or before.

SUPRALAPSARIAN. } adj. [supra and laps]

SUPRALAPSARY. } [supra, Lat.] Antecedent to the fall of man.

The doctrine is supralapsarian, with whom the decree is homoconditus, man created not fallen; and the sublapsarian, with whom it is fallen, or the corrupt man. Hammond.

SUPRAVULGAR. adj. [supra and vulgar.] Above the vulgar.

None of these motives can prevail with a man to furnish himself with supra-vulgar and noble notions. Locke.

SUPREMACY. n. f. [from supreme.] Highest place; highest authority; state of being supreme.

No appeal may be made unto any one of higher power, in as much as the order of your dispute admitteth no standing inequality of courts, nor a ritual judge to have any ordinary superiority over us, but as many supremacies as there are pastors of several congregations. Hale.

As we under heaven are supreme head, So, under him, that great supremacy, Where we do reign, we will alone uphold. Shakespeare.

SUR

I am assur'd that women
Should look for rule, supremacy, and sway,
When they are bound to serve, love, and obey.
Shakespeare.

Put to proof his high supremacy,
Whether upheld by strength, or chance, or fate.
Milton.

He never had no intention to change religion;
He was not to turn protestants after he had cast off the pope's yoke.
Swift.

You're to and by nature for this supremacy,
Which is granted from the distinguishing character of your writing.
Dryden.

But the wild curs that from their masters run,
Attending for supremacy of mine,
Have left and eaves the rebel race begun.
Dryden.

Supremacy of nature, or supremacy of perfection;
It is possessed of all perfection, and the highest excellency possible.
Waterland.

To deny him this supremacy is to detract from his kingdom to another.
Rogers.

SUPREME. adj. [supremus, Lat.] Highest in dignity; highest in authority. It may be observed that superiour is used often of local elevation, but su- preme only of intellectual or political.

As no man serves God, and loveth him not; so no man can any man sincerely love God, and not extremely abhor that sin which is the highest degree of rebellion against the supreme Guide and Monarch of the whole world, with whose divine authority and power it must overthrow others.
Hooker.

The god of soldiers,
With the consent of supreme Jove, inform Thy thoughts with nobleness!
Shakespeare.

My soul akes
To know, when two authorities are up,
Not supreme, how soon confusion
May enter 'twixt the gap of both.
Shakespeare.

This strength, the seat of Deity supreme.
Milton.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shrubs rising up, and spreads by slow degrees;
Three centuries he grows, and three he flays
His supreme in state, and in three more decays.
Dryden.

Highest; most excellent.
No single virtue we can most commend,
Whether it be the wife, the mother, or the friend,
For he was all in that supreme degree,
That, as to one prevail'd, so all was there.
Dryden.

To him both heav'n
The right had giv'n,
And his own love bequeath'd supreme command.
Dryden.

SUPREMACY. adv. [from the adjective.]
In the highest degree.
The favouring chemist in his golden views
Specially blest, the poet in his muse.
Pope.

SUR. [sur, Fr.] In composition, means upon, or over and above.

SURABDITION. n. f. [sur and addition.] Something added to the name.
He liv'd with glory and admir'd success,
He could the suraddition, Leonatus.
Shakespeare.

SURAL. adj. [from sura, Lat.] Being in the calf of the leg.
He was wounded in the inside of the calf of his leg, into the sural artery.
Weyman.

SURCEP. n. f. [from surc.] Warrant;
founty; assurance.
Give some surceps that thou art revenge;
Sub them, or tear them on thy chariot wheels.
Shakespeare.

SURBATE. v. a. [solbati, Fr.] To bruise and batter the feet with travel;
to harass; to fatigue.
Their march they continued all that night, the troopers often alighting, that the foot might ride,
and others taking many of them behind them,
so that they could not but be extremely weary and fatigued.
Clarendon.

SURBUT. The participle passive of sur- beat, which Spenser seems to have used for surbate.

A bear and tiger being met
In cruel fight, on Lybick ocean wale, Espy a traveller with feet surbate,
Whom they in equal prey hope to devour.
Spenser.

TO SURCEP. v. n. [sur and cep, Fr.;
cep, Lat.]
1. To be at an end; to stop; to cease; to be no longer in use or being.
Small favours will my prayers increase;
Granting my suit, you give me all;
And thus my prayers and needs surcep.
For I have made your godhead all.
Daniel.

2. To leave off; to practise no longer; to refrain finally.
To fly who other than God, to despise, that creates unworthy shall be able to obtain any thing at his hands, and under that pretence to sur- cep from prayers, as booties of traitors officers, were to him no less injuries than pernicious to our own souls.
Hooker.

Not did the British squadrons now surcep.
To gall their foes of earth and
So pray'd he, whilst an angel's voice from high Bade him surcep to importune the sky.
Harte.

TO SURCEP. v. a. To stop; to put an end to. Obsolete.
All puns both end, and every war both peace;
But mine no peace, nor prayer, may surcep.
Spenser.

SURCEP. n. f. Cessation; stop.
It might very well agree with your principles, if your discipline were fully planted, even to find out your wants of surcep into all counts of England for the most things handled in them.
Hooker.

TO SURCHARGE. v. a. [surcharge, Fr.]
To overload; to overburden.
They put upon every portion of land a ten-pound rent, which they called surcharge, the which might not surcharge the tenant or freeholder.
Spenser.

Tamias was returned to Taurus, in hope to have suddenly surpris'd his enemy, surcharged with the pleasures of so rich a city.
Knotter.

More remov'd,
I left heav'n, surcharg'd with potent multitude,
Might hap to move new breaths.
Milton.

He ceas'd, discerning Adam with such my surcharg'd, as had, like grief, been drow'd in tears Without the vent of words.
Milton.

When grateful sorrow in her pomp appears,
Sure she is diew'd in Melembala's tears
Your head reclind, as boding grief from view,
Droops like a rose surcharg'd with morning dew.
Duden.

SURCHARGE. n. f. [surcharge, Fr. from the verb.] Burden added to burden; overburden; more than can be well born.
The air, after receiving a charge, doth not receive a surcharge, or greater charge, with like appetite as it doth the first.
Bacon.

An object of surcharge or excess despoyleth the sense; as the light of the sun, the eye; a violent sound near the ear, the hearing.
The moralists make this ruling of a lion to be a surcharge of one malice upon another.
Elfrange.

SURCHARGER. n. f. [from surcharge.]
One that overburdens.

SURCINGLE. n. f. [sur and cingulum,
Latin.]
1. A girth with which the burden is bound upon a horse.
2. The girdle of a callock.
Justly he chose the surcingle and gown.
Mortimer.

SURCULE. n. f. [surculus, Lat.] A shoot;
a twig; a sucker. Not in general use.
It is an arborescent excrecence, or superfluous, which the tree cannot assimilate, and therefore sprouteth not forth in boughs and surcules of the same shape unto the tree.
Bruce.

SUR

The holiness dividing into two branches below
the coat, the outward fendeth two surcules into the thorns.
Brown.

SURCOAT. n. f. [surcoat, old Fr. sur and
coat.] A short coat worn over the rest
of the dress.
The honorable habillments, as robes of state,
pallament-robe, the surcoat and mantle.
Camden.

The commons were hotted in excess of apparel, in wide surcoats reaching to their loins.
Camden.

That day in equal arms they fought for fame;
Then famous, then fluehls, their surcoats were the
time.
Dryden.

SURD. adj. [surdus, Lat.]
1. Deaf; wanting the sense of hearing.
2. Unheard; not perceived by the ear.
3. Not expected by any term.

SURDITY. n. f. [from surd.] Deafness.

SURDUMBER. n. f. [from surd and num- ber.] That is incommensurate with unity.

SURE. adj. [seure, Fr.]
1. Certain; unfailing; infallible.
The testimony of the Lord is sure, and giveth wisdom unto the simple.
Psalms.

Who knows,
Let this be sure, whether our angry foe
Conjures it, or will ever? How he can
Is doubtful, that he never will, is sure.
Milton.

2. Certainly doothed.
On our beyond it is valued according to the force in it. Tending it in balance is the latest way, and the weight is sure to go.
Locke.

3. Confident; undoubting; certainly knowing.
Faint Laurence met them both;
How he knew well, and guess'd that it was he;
But, being ask'd, he was not sure of it.
Shakespeare.

Let no man seek what may befall;
Evil he may be sure.
The youngest in the morning are not sure
That till the night their life they can secure.
Dunham.

While fore of battle, while our wounds are green,
Why would we tempt the doubtful dye again?
He wants renew'd, no certain of success,
Succ of a flourish, as imparts of the peace.
Dryden.

If you find nothing new in the matter, sur sur
much is will you in the sight.
Be silent always, when you doubt your sense,
And speak, though sur, with seeming diffidence.
Pope.

4. Safe; firm; certain; past doubt or danger. To make sure is to secure, to as that nothing shall put it out of one's possession or power.
Thy kingdom shall be sure unto thee, after that thou shalt have known that the heavens do rule.
Daniel.

He had me make sur of the bear, before I kill
his skin.
They would make others on both sides sur of pleading, in preference to martyrdom.
Dryden.

They have a nearer and sur way to the fel-
city of life, by trampling their passions, and reducing their appetites.
A peace cannot last, provided we make sur of Spain.
Revenge is now my joy, let's not for me,
And I'll make sur he never shall be for thee.
Dryden.

I bred you up to arms, rais'd you to power,
All to make sur the vengeance of this day.
Which even this day has ruin'd.
Dryden.

Make sur, and give up Uthor,
Cesar will ne'er relate thee such a tale.
Play have a plan to make all actions worthy of observation, which are sur to be observed.
Steele.

5. Firm; stable; steady; not liable to failure.

SUR

The holiness dividing into two branches below
the coat, the outward fendeth two surcules into
the thorns.
Brown.

SURCOAT. n. f. [surcoat, old Fr. sur and
coat.] A short coat worn over the rest
of the dress.
The honorable habillments, as robes of state,
pallament-robe, the surcoat and mantle.
Camden.

The commons were hotted in excess of apparel, in wide surcoats reaching to their loins.
Camden.

That day in equal arms they fought for fame;
Then famous, then fluehls, their surcoats were the
time.
Dryden.

SURD. adj. [surdus, Lat.]
1. Deaf; wanting the sense of hearing.
2. Unheard; not perceived by the ear.
3. Not expected by any term.

SURDITY. n. f. [from surd.] Deafness.

SURDUMBER. n. f. [from surd and num- ber.] That is incommensurate with unity.

SURE. adj. [seure, Fr.]
1. Certain; unfailing; infallible.
The testimony of the Lord is sure, and giveth wisdom unto the simple.
Psalms.

Who knows,
Let this be sure, whether our angry foe
Conjures it, or will ever? How he can
Is doubtful, that he never will, is sure.
Milton.

2. Certainly doothed.
On our beyond it is valued according to the force in it. Tending it in balance is the latest way, and the weight is sure to go.
Locke.

3. Confident; undoubting; certainly knowing.
Faint Laurence met them both;
How he knew well, and guess'd that it was he;
But, being ask'd, he was not sure of it.
Shakespeare.

Let no man seek what may befall;
Evil he may be sure.
The youngest in the morning are not sure
That till the night their life they can secure.
Dunham.

While fore of battle, while our wounds are green,
Why would we tempt the doubtful dye again?
He wants renew'd, no certain of success,
Succ of a flourish, as imparts of the peace.
Dryden.

If you find nothing new in the matter, sur sur
much is will you in the sight.
Be silent always, when you doubt your sense,
And speak, though sur, with seeming diffidence.
Pope.

4. Safe; firm; certain; past doubt or danger. To make sure is to secure, to as that nothing shall put it out of one's possession or power.
Thy kingdom shall be sure unto thee, after that thou shalt have known that the heavens do rule.
Daniel.

He had me make sur of the bear, before I kill
his skin.
They would make others on both sides sur of
pleading, in preference to martyrdom.
Dryden.

They have a nearer and sur way to the fel-
city of life, by trampling their passions, and reducing their appetites.
A peace cannot last, provided we make sur of Spain.
Revenge is now my joy, let's not for me,
And I'll make sur he never shall be for thee.
Dryden.

I bred you up to arms, rais'd you to power,
All to make sur the vengeance of this day.
Which even this day has ruin'd.
Dryden.

Make sur, and give up Uthor,
Cesar will ne'er relate thee such a tale.
Play have a plan to make all actions worthy of observation, which are sur to be observed.
Steele.

5. Firm; stable; steady; not liable to failure.

Then the garland wear'st successively;
Yet though thou stand'st more pure than I could do,
Thou art not firm enough. Shakespeare.
I with your horses swift and sure of foot,
And so I do commend you to their backs.

Shakespeare.
I wrapt in force bands both their hands and feet,
And cast them under hatches. Chapman.
Virtue, dear friend, needs no defence;
The surest guard is innocence. Rowe.
Partition firm and force the waters to divide.

Milton.
Doubting thus of innate principles, men will call pulling up the old foundations of knowledge and certainty: I persuade myself that the way I have pursued, being conformable to truth, lays those foundations sure. Lacke.

To prove a genuine birth,
On female truth attending faith is lies;
Thus mantle of right, I build my claim,
Sure founded, on a firm maternal stage. Pope.

6. To be Sure. Certainly. This is a various expression: more properly be sure.
Objects of sense would then determine the views of all such, to be sure, who converted perpetually with them. Atterbury.

Though the rhymer could not endure the epitaph notion, to obtain its fixed lot, to be sure it must have some. Arbuthnot.

SURE. adv. [from sure, Fr.] Certainly; without doubt; doubtless. It is generally without emphasis; and, notwithstanding its original meaning, expresses rather doubt than assertion.

Something, sure, of fate
Hath puddled his clear spirit. Shakespeare.
Her looks were flourish'd, and tallen was her mien,
That face the virgin goddess, had the been Aught but a virgin, could the guilt have been. Aldrich.

Sure the queen would with him full unknown.
She loaths, detests him, flies his hated presence.

Sure upon the whole, a bad author deserves better usage than a bad critic. Pope.

SUREFOOTED. adj. [from sure and foot.]
Treading firmly; not stumbling.

True earnest furrows, rooted miseries,
Anguish in grain, vexations ripe and blown,
Surefooted griefs, solid calamities. Herbert.

SURELY. adv. [from sure.]

1. Certainly; undoubtedly; without doubt.
It is often used rather to intend and strengthen the meaning of the sentence, than with any distinct and explicable meaning.

In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die. Genesis.
Thou surely hadst not come sole fugitive.

He that created something out of nothing, surely can raise great things out of small. South.

The curious have thought the most minute affairs of Rome worth notice; and surely the consideration of their wealth is at least of as great importance as grammatical eruditions. Locke.

Surely we may presume, without affecting to fit in the feat of God, to think some very fallible men liable to errors. Waterland.

2. Firmly; without hazard.

He that walketh righteously, walketh surely. Psalms.

SURENESS. n. f. [from sure.] Certainly.

The subtleague, that for sureness takes Takes its own time to assault to make. Caesar.

He diverted himself with the speculation of the seed of coral: and for more sureness he repeats it.
Woodward.

SURETISHIP. n. f. [from surety.] The office of a surety or bondman; the act of being bound for another.

Idly, like prisoners which whole months will scur. Donne.

That only suretiship hath brought them there.

If here not clear'd no suretiship can bail
Condemned debtors from th' eternal goal. Denham.

Hath not the greatest slaughter of armies been effected by stratagem? And have not the fairest climates been destroyed by suretiship? Saunders.

SURETY. n. f. [from sureté, Fr.]

1. Certainty; indubitableness.

Know of a surety that thy feed shall be a stranger
Genesis.

2. Security; safety.

There the princesses determining to bathe, thought it was to privilege a place as no body durst presume to come thither; yet, for the more surety they looked round about. Saunders.

3. Foundation of stability; support.

We are true

Hold, as you yours, while our obedience holds;
On other surety none. Milton.

4. Evidence; ratification; confirmation.

She call'd the taints to proof,

That the world never put it from her finger,
Unless she gave it to yourself. Shakespeare.

5. Security against loss or damage; security for payment.

There remains unpaid

A hundred thousand more, in surety of which
One part of Aquitania is bound to us. Shakespeare.

6. Hostage; bondman; one that gives security for another; one that is bound for another.

That you may well perceive I have not wrong'd
you,

One of the greatest in the christian world
Shall be my surety. Shakespeare.

I will be surety for him; of my hand shalt thou require him. Genesis.

Yet be not surety, if thou be a father;
Love is a personal debt: I cannot give My children's right, nor ought he take it. Herbert.

All, in infancy, are by others presented with the desires of the parents, and intercession of sureties, that they may be early admitted by baptism into the school of Christ. Hammond.

SURFACE. n. f. [from sur and face, Fr.] Super-ficies; outside; superface. It is accented by Milton on the last syllable.

Which of us who beholds the bright surface
Of this ethereal mold, whereon we stand.

Milton.

Errors like straws upon the surface flow;
He who would search for pearls must dive below.

Dryden.

All their surfaces shall be truly plain, or truly spherical, and look all the same way, to us together to compose one even surface. Newton.

TO SURETY. v. a. [from sur and faire,
Fr. to do more than enough, to overdo.]

To feed with meat or drink to satiety and heinousness; to cram overmuch.

The surety of the

Do mock their charge with mores. Shakespeare.

TO SURETY. v. n. To be fed to satiety and heinousness.

they that starve with nothing. Shakespeare.

Fake heed lest your hearts be overcharged with surety and drunkenness. Lake.

Through time had to surety in the vineyards,
and with the wares, that they had been left behind,
the generosity of the Spaniards sent them all home.
Clarendon.

They must be let loose to the childish play they fancy, which they should be weaned from, by being made to surety of it. Locke.

SURETY. n. f. [from the verb.] Sickness or satiety caused by overfulness.

When we are sick in fortune, often the sureties of our own behaviour, we make guilty in our disasters the sun, the moon and stars. Shakespeare.

How all white hairs become a fowl and jetter!
I have long dream'd of such a kind of man,
So surety-well'd, so old, and so prolix.

Shakespeare.

Now comes the sick hour that his surety made;
Now shall he try his friends that surety him. Shakespeare.

Why, disease, dost thou molest
Ladies, and of them the best?
Do not men grow sick of riles,
To thy attacks, by their nights
Spent in sureties?

Ben Jonson.

Surf; its many times turn to purges, both upwards and downwards. Baron.

Peace, which he lov'd in life, did lend
Her hand to bring him to his end;
When age and death call'd for the score,
No sureties were to reckon for. Crichton.

Our father

Has taken himself a surety of the world,
And cries, it is not late that we should take it. Shakespeare.

SURFEIT. n. f. [from surfeit.] One who riots; a glutton.

I did not think

This surfeit would have done this, a
For such a petty war. Shakespeare.

SURFEITWATER. n. f. [from surfeit and water.]
Water that cures surfeits.

A little cold distilled poppywater, which is true surfeitwater, with ease and abatement, and cures distempers in the beginning. Locke.

SURGE. n. f. [from surgo, Lat.] A we-ling sea; wave rolling above the general surface of the water; billow; wave.

The realm was left, like a ship in a storm, midst
all the raging surges, unruled and uncontroul'd any. Spenser.

The wind shak'd surge, with high and monstrous main.

Seems to cast water on the burning hear,
And quench the guards of the ever-bred pole
I never did like motion view
On the enlashed flood. Shakespeare.

He trod the water,

Whose enemy he shak'd aside, and break'd
The surge molt twain that met him. Shakespeare.

It was formerly famous for the unfortunate of Hero and Leander, drowned in the uncompesonate surges. Saunders.

The sulphurous hail

Shot after us in storm, o'erblown, hath laid
The fiery surge, that from the precipice
Of heav'n receiv'd us falling. Milton.

He sweeps the skies, and clears the cloudy air,
He flies aloft, and with impetuous roar
Purges the foaming surges to the shore. Dryden.

Thus, near Ilium's swelling flood,
With dread behold the rolling surges sweep
In heaps his slaughter'd sons into the deep. Pope.

TO SURGE. v. n. [from surgo, Lat.] To swell; to rise high.

From midst of all the main

The surging waters like a mountain rise. Spenser.

He, all in rage, his ten-god ire brought,
Some cruel vengeance on his son to cast,
From surging gulls two monsters brought brought. Spenser.

The serpent mov'd, not with indented wave,
Proned on the ground, as since, but on his rear,
Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd
I told above told, a surging maze! Milton.

Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to flaves dash'd, the assault renew,
Van battery, and in truth or bubblesend. Milton.

SURGEON. n. f. [corrupted by conversion from chirurgon.] One who cures by manual operation; one whose duty is to act in external maladies by the direction of the physician.

The wound was pass the cure of a better surgeon than myself, for as I could but receive blood from her dying words. Shakespeare.

I meddle with no woman's matters; but when I am a surgeon to old shoes.

He that hath wounded his neighbour, is bound the expenses of the surgeon, and other medical costs. Locke.

Though most were sorely wounded, none were slain.

The surgeons soon despatch'd them of their arms.

And some with talves they cure. Shakespeare.

SURGERY. } n. f. [for chirurgery.] The SURGERY. } act of curing by manual operation.

It would seem very evil surgery to cut off every unfound part of the body, which, being by other due means recovered, might afterwards do good service. Spenser.

Strangely visited people,
 The mere despair of surgery, he cures. Shakespeare.
 They are often turred over with the surgery of our sheep, and would you have us kiss tar?

SURGEY. adj. [from surge.] Rising in bil-lows.

Do publick or domestick cares constrain
 This loislome voyage o'er the surgy main? Pope.

 That take it on you at the first to roundly.

That surly spirit, melancholy,
 Had bak'd thy blood, and made it heavy thick,
 Which else runs tickling up and down the veins,
 Making that idiot laughter keep men's eyes,
 And strain their cheeks to idle merriment.

Against the capitol I met a lion,
 Who glar'd upon me, and went surly by,
 Without annoying me. Shakespeare.

Rebuk'd by surly grooms, who wait before
 The sleeping tyrant's interdicted door. Dryden.

What it among the courtly tribe
 You lost a place, and sav'd a bribe?
 And then in surly mood came here
 To fifteen hundred pounds a year,

And force against the whigs harangu'd?
 The zephyrs floating loose, the timely rains,
 Now bott'nd into joy the surly storms. Thomson.

SURMISE. v. a. [from surmise, Fr.] To sur-spect; to imagine imperfectly; to imagine without certain knowledge.

Man coveteth what exceedeth the reach of sense, yea somewhat above capacity of reason, somewhat divine and heavenly, which with hidden cultivation it rather surmiseth than conceiveth:
 for what it seeketh, and what that is directly it knoweth not; yet very intensive desire thereof doth it move it, that all other known delights and pleasures are laid aside, and they give place to the search of this but only suspected desire.

Of questions and strives of words cometh envy, railings, and evil surmisings. 1 Timothy.

His preference to these narrow bounds confin'd.

It wast'd nearer yet, and then she knew
 That what before she but surmis'd, was true.

It change was not wrought by altering the complexion of the earth, as was surmised by a very learned man, but by dissolving it. Woodward.

SURMISE. n. f. [from surmise, Fr.] Imperfect notion; suspicion; imagination not supported by knowledge.

To let go a private surmise, whereby the thing itself may not make better or worse; if just and allowable reasons might lead them to do as they did,
 there are these censures frustrate. Hooker.

They were by law of that proud tyranness,
 Provok'd with wrath, and envy's false surmise,
 Condemn'd to that dungeon mercies,
 Where they should live in woe, and die in wretchedness. Spenser.

My compassionate heart
 Will not permit my eyes once to behold
 The thing, whereat it trembles by surmise. Shakespeare.
 My thought, whose murderings yet is but fantatical,

Shakes to my single state of man, that function
 Is smother'd in surmise. Shakespeare.
 No sooner did they spy the English turning from them, but they were of opinion that they fled towards their shipping: this surmise was confirmed, for that the English ships removed the day before. Hagyard.

We double honour gain
 From his surmise prov'd false. Milton.

Hence guilty joys, dainties, surmisings,
 False oaths, false tears, decess, dignities. Pope.
 No man ought to be charged with principles he actually disowns, unless his practices contradict his profession; not upon small surmisings. Swift.

TO SURMOUNT. v. a. [from surmonter, Fr.]

1. To rise above.
 The mountains of Olympus, Atlas, and Atlas, over-reach and surmount all winds and clouds.

2. To conquer; to overcome.

Though no resistance was made, the English had much ado to surmount the natural difficulties of the place the greatest part of one day. Hoyward.
 He hardly escaped to the Persian court; from whence, if the love of his country had not sur- mounted its base ingratitude to him, he had many invitations to return at the head of the Persian fleet, but he rather chose a voluntary death. Swift.

3. To surpass; to exceed.

What surmounts the reach
 Of human sense, I shall delineate so,
 By lik'ning spiritual to corporeal forms,
 As may express them best. Milton.

SURMOUNTABLE. adj. [from surmount.]
 Conquerable; superable.

SURMOUNTED. n. f. [from surmount.] One that rises above another.

1. The name of the family; the name which one has over and above the christian name.

Many which were mere English joined with the Irish against the king, taking on them Irish habits and customs, which could never since be clean wiped away; of which sort be most of the surnames that end in an, as Herman, Shuman, and Mungan, which now account themselves natural Irish.

He, made heir not only of his brother's kingdom, but of his virtues and haughty thoughts, and of the surname also of Barbarossa, began to aspire to the empire. Knollys.

The epithets of great men, monsieur Boileau is of opinion, were in the nature of surnames, and repeated as such. Pope.

2. An appellation added to the original name.

Witness may
 My surname Coriolanus: the painful service,
 The extreme dangers, and the drops of blood
 Shed for my thankless country, are requir'd.
 But with that surname. Shakespeare.

TO SURNAME. v. a. [from surnommer, French, from the noun.] To name by an appellation added to the original name.

Another shall subscribe with his hand unto the Lord, and surname himself by the name of Israel.

Pyreicus, only famous for counterfeiting earth in pitchers, a scullery, rogues together by the ears, was surnamed Rupographus. Peachment.

How he, surm'd of Africa, dishonour'd
 In his prime youth the fair Iberian maid.

God commanded man what was good; but the devil surm'd it evil; and thereby baffled the command. Milton.

TO SURPASS. v. a. [from surpasser, French.] To excel; to exceed; to go beyond in excellence.

The climate's delicate,
 Fertile the soil, the temple much surpassing
 The common prate it bears. Shakespeare.

O, by what name, for thou above all these,
 Above mankind, or might than mankind higher,
Surpass thou far my naming? how may I Adore thee, author of this universe? Milton.

Achilles, Homer's hero, in strength and courage surpassed the rest of the Grecian army. Dryden.

A nymph of late there was,
 Whose beauty form her fellows did surpass,
 The pride and joy of fair Arcadia's plains.

Under or near the lone mountains, which, for heights and number, surpass those of colder countries, as much as the heat there surpasses that of those countries. Woodward.

SURPASSABLE. adj. [from surpass and able.] That may be excelled. Dict.

SURPASSING. participial adj. [from sur- pass.] Excellent in a high degree.

O thou! that, with surpassing glory crown'd,
 Look'st from thy tale dominion like the god
 Of this new world. Milton.

His miracles proved him to be sent from God, not more by that infinite power that was seen in them, than by that surpassing goodness they demonstrated to the world. Colum.

SURPASSINGLY. adv. [from surpassing.]
 In a very excellent manner. Dict.

SURPLICE. n. f. [from surplis, Fr. sur- perplucium, Latin.] The white garb which the clergy wear in their acts of munification.

It will wear the surplice of humility over the black gown of a big heart. Shakespeare.

The cinctus guburnis is a long garment, not unlike a surplice, which would have been on the ground, had it hung loose, and was therefore gathered about the middle with a girdle. Addison.

SURPLUS. } n. f. [from sur and plus, Fr.]

SURPLUSAGE. } A supernumerary part;
 overplus, what remains when use is satisfied.

That turret's frame most admirable was
 In the highest heaven compassed around,
 And lifted high above this earthly mass,
 Which it survey'd, as hills do lower ground.

Spenser.

To SURVIVE, v. n. [supervivo, Latin; survivre, French.]

1. To live after the death of another.
 I'll assure her of

Her widowhood, be it that she survives me,
 In all my lands and leases whatsoever. Shakespeare.
 Took that survive, let Rome reward with love. Shakespeare.

Try pleasure,
 Which, when no other enemy survives,
 Still conquers all the conquerors. Denham.

2. To live after any thing.
 Now that he is dead, his immortal fame survives,
 And flourishes in the mouths of all people. Spenser.

The love of horses which they had alive,
 And care of chariots, after death survives. Dryden.
 The rhapsodies, called the charnel-songs, would never have survived the first edition, if they had not discovered to strong a tincture of infidelity. Watts.

3. To remain alive.
 No longer now that golden age appears,
 When patriarch-wits survive'd a thousand years;
 Now length of time, our second life, is lost,
 And bare three-score is all ev'n that can boast;
 Our sons their fathers' failing language see,
 And such as Chaucer is, shall Dryden be. Pope.

To SURVIVE, v. a. To outlive.
SURVIVER, n. f. [from survive.] One who outlives another.

Your father lost a father,
 That father, his; and the survivor bound
 In filial obligation, for some term,
 To do obsequious sorrow. Shakespeare.

Although time died, the father beholding so many decedents, the number of survivors must still be very great. Bacon.

I did discern
 From his survivors, I could nothing learn. Denham.
 Her majesty is heir to the survivor of the late king. Seyt.

SURVIVORSHIP, n. f. [from survive.]

Such offices granted in reversion were void, unless where the grant has been by survivorship. Ayliffe.

SUSCEPTIBILITY, n. f. [from susceptible.]
 Quality of admitting; tendency to admit.

The susceptibility of those influences, and the effects thereof, is the general providential law whereby other physical beings are governed. Hale.

SUSCEPTIBLE, adj. [susceptible, Fr.] Prior has accented this improperly on the first syllable. Capable of admitting, disposed to admit.

He moulded him platonically to his own idea, delighting first in the choice of the materials, because he found him susceptible of good form. Wotton.

In their tender years they are more susceptible of various impressions than afterwards, when solicited by vulgar inclinations. Leffrange.

Children's minds are narrow, and usually susceptible but of one thought at once. Locke.
 Blow with empty words the susceptible flame. Pope.

SUSCEPTION, n. f. [susceptus, Lat.] Act of taking.

A canon, promoted to holy orders before he is of lawful age for the susception of orders, shall have a voice in the chapter. Ag. offe.

SUSCEPTIVE, adj. [from susceptus, Latin.]
 This word is more analogical, though less used, than susceptible. Capable to admit.

Since our nature is so susceptive of errors on all sides, it is fit we should have notices given us how far other persons may become the causes of false judgments. Watts.

SUSCEPTENCY, n. f. [from susceptive.]
 Reception; admission.

SUSCIPIENT, n. f. [suscipiens, Lat.]
 One who takes; one that admits or receives.

To SUSCITATE, v. n. [susciter, Fr. suscito, Lat.] To rouse; to excite.

It concurth but unto predispoted effects, and only suscitates those forms whose determinations are formal, and proceed from the idea of themselves. Proust.

SUSCITATION, n. f. [suscitation, Fr. from suscitate.] The act of rousing or exciting.

To SUSPECT, v. a. [suspicio, suspectum,
 Latin.]

1. To imagine with a degree of fear and jealousy what is not known.

Nothing makes a man suspect much, more than to know little; and therefore men should remedy suspicion by procuring to know more. Bacon.
 Let us not then suspect our happy state,
 As not secure. Milton.

From her hand I could suspect no ill. Milton.

2. To imagine guilty without proof.
 Though many poets may suspect themselves for the partiality of parents to their youngest children, I know myself too well to be ever satisfied with my own conceptions. Dryden.

Some would persuade us that body and extension are the same thing, which changes the signification of words; which I would not suspect them of, they having so severely condemned the philosophy of others. Locke.

3. To hold uncertain; to doubt.
 I cannot forbear a story which is so well attested, that I have no manner of reason to suspect the truth. Addison.

To SUSPECT, v. n. To imagine guilt.
 If I suspect without cause, let me be your jest. Shakespeare.

SUSPECT, part. adj. [suspect, Fr.] Doubtful.

Sordid interests or affectation of strange relations are not like to render your reports suspect or untrue. Granville.

SUSPECT, n. f. [from the verb.] Suspicion; imagination without proof. Obsolete.

No fancy mine, no other wrong suspect,
 Make me, O virtuous shame, thy laws neglect. Sidney.

The sale of offices and towns in France,
 If they were known, as the suspect is great,
 Would make thee quickly hop without a head. Shakespeare.

My most worthy master, in whole breast
 Doubt and suspect, alas! are plac'd too late,
 You should have fear'd false times, when you did feast. Shakespeare.

There be so many false prints of praise, that a man may justly hold it a suspect. Bacon.

Nothing more jealous than a favourite towards the waning time and suspect of flattery. Wotton.

They might hold true intelligence
 Among themselves, without suspect to offend. Daniel.

If the king ends the differences, and takes away the suspect, the case will be no worse than when two duellists enter the field. Suckling.

To SUSPEND, v. a. [suspendre, Fr. sus-pendo, Latin.]

1. To hang; to make to hang by any thing.

As 'twixt two equal armies fate
 Suspend uncertain victory!

Our souls, which, to advance our fate,
 Were gone out, hung 'twixt her and me. Denham.

It is reported by Ruffinus, that in the temple of Scap'is there was an iron char, or suspended by load-stones; which stones removed, the chariot fell and was dashed to pieces. Brown.

2. To make to depend upon.
 God hath in the scripture suspended the promise of eternal life upon this condition, that, without obedience and holiness of life, no man shall ever see the Lord. Tilgton.

3. To interrupt; to make to stop for a time.

The harmony
Suspended hell, and took with raptiment
 The thronging audience. Milton.

The guard nor lights nor fires; their fate so near,
 At once suspended their courage and their fear. Denham.

The British dame, fam'd for restless grace,
 Commands not now but for the second place;
 Our love suspended, we neglect the fairy
 For whom we burn'd, to gaze adoring here. Granville.

4. To delay; to hinder from proceeding.
 Suspend your indignation against my brother, till you can derive from him better testimony of his intent. Shakespeare.

His answer did the nymph attend;
 Her looks, her sighs, her gestures all did pray him;
 But Godfrey wisely did his grant suspend,
 He doubt is the worst, and that a while did stay him. Fairfax.

To themselves I left them;
 For I suspended their doom. Milton.

The reasons for suspending the play were ill founded. Dryden.

This is the hinge on which turns the liberty of intellectual beings, in their steady prosecution of true felicity, that they may suspend this prosecution in particular cases, till they have looked before them. Locke.

5. To keep undetermined.
 A man may suspend his choice from being determined for or against the thing proposed, till he has examined whether it be really of a nature to make him happy or no. Locke.

6. To defer for a time from the execution of an office or enjoyment of a revenue.
 Good men should not be suspended from the exercise of their ministry, and deprived of their livelihood, for ceremonies which are on all hands acknowledged indifferent. Sandonson.

The bishop of London was summoned for not suspending Dr. Sharp. Smyt.

SUSPENSE, n. f. [suspens, Fr. suspensus,
 Latin.]

1. Uncertainty; delay of certainty or determination; indeterminateness.

Till this be done, their good affection towards the safety of the church is acceptable, but the way they prescribe us to preserve it by, must rest in suspense. Hooker.

Such true joy's suspense
 What dream can I pretend to recompense? Waller.

Ten days the prophet in suspense remain'd,
 Would no man's state pronounce, at last constrain'd
 By Itharus, he too mildly resign'd. Denham.

2. Act of withholding the judgment.
 In propositions, where though the proofs in view are of most moment, yet there are sufficient grounds to suspect that there is fallacy, or proofs as considerable to be produced on the contrary side, there suspense or diffidence is often voluntary. Locke.

Whatever necessity determines to the pursuit of real bliss, the same necessity establishes suspense, deliberation and tentativeness, whether its satisfaction ministers true or false happiness. Locke.

3. Stop in the midst of two opposites.
 For thee the fates, torn by kind, ordain
 A cool suspense from pleasure or from pain.

SUSPENSIVE, adj. [suspensus, Latin.]

1. Held from proceeding.

The great light of day yet wants to run
Much of his race, though sleep, suspense in heaven Held by thy voice. Milton.

2. Held in doubt; held in expectation.

The fellious orders allowed, but yet established in more wary and suspense manner, as being to stand in force till God should give the opportunity of some general conference what might be left for every of them afterwards to do, had both prevented all occasion of just dislike which others might take, and referred a greater liberty unto the authors themselves, of entering unto further consultation afterwards. Hooker.

This said, he sat; and expectation held
His looks suspense, awaiting what appear'd
To second or oppose. Milton.

SUSPENSION. n. f. [suspension, Fr. from suspend.]

1. Act of making to hang on any thing.
2. Act of making to depend on any thing.
3. Act of delaying.

Had we had time to pray,
With thousand vows and tears we should have fought,

That sad decree's suspension to have wrought. Waller.

4. Act of withholding or balancing the judgment.

In his Indian relations, wherein are contained incredible accounts, he is suspense to be read with suspension; there are they which weakened his authorities with former ages, for he is seldom mentioned without derogatory parentheses. Brown.

The mode of the will, which answers to dubita-tion, may be called suspension; and that which in the fantastick will is obliquity, is constancy in the intellectual. Grew.

5. Interruption; temporary cessation.

Nor was any thing done for the better adjusting things in the time of that suspension, but every thing left in the same state of unconcernedness as before. Clarendon.

6. Temporary privation of an office; as, the clerk incurred suspension.

SUSPENSORY. adj. [suspensoire, Fr. suspensus, Lat.] That by which any thing hangs.

There are several parts peculiar to brutes which are wanting in man, as the seventh or suspensory muscles of the eye. Rap.

SUSPICION. n. f. [suspicion, Fr. suspi-cia, Lat.] The act of suspecting; imagination of something ill without proof.

This suspicion Miso for the hoggish shrewdness of her brain, and Mopsa for a very unlikely envy, flambed upon. Sidney.

Suspicious amongst thoughts are like bats amongst birds; they ever fly by twilight; they are to be repelled, or at the least well guarded, for they cloud the mind. Lucan.

Suspicion all our lives shall be thick full of eyes;
For reason is but half-d like a fox,
Who, ne'er to tame, to cherish'd and lock'd up,
Will have a wild trick of his anthers. Shakspeare.

Though wisdom wake, suspicion sleeps
At wisdom's gate; and to simplicity
Rebels her charge, while goodness thinks no ill
Where no ill seems. Milton.

SUSPICIOUS. adj. [suspiciosus, Latin.]

1. Inclined to suspect; inclined to imagine ill without proof.

Nature itself, after it has done an injury, will for ever be suspicious, and no man can love the person he suspects. South.

2. Indicating suspicion or fear.

A wise man will find us to be rogues by our faces:
we have a suspicious, fearful, constrained countenance, often turning and flinking through narrow lanes. Swift.

3. Liable to suspicion; giving reason to imagine ill.

They, because the light of his candle too much drowned theirs, were glad to lay hold on to colour-able matter, and exceeding forward to traduce him as an author of suspicious innovations. Hooker.

I spy a black suspicious threatening
That will encounter with our glorious sun.
Authors are suspicious, nor greedily followed, who pretend to deliver untrathful things, and the occult abstrinities of things.

His life
Private, unactive, calm, contemplative,
Little suspicious to any king.
Many mischievous insects are daily at work, to make people of merit suspicious of each other. Pope.

SUSPICIOUSLY. adv. [from suspicious.]

1. With suspicion.
2. So as to raise suspicion.

His guard entering the place, found Phlegus with his sword in his hand, but not naked, but standing suspiciously enough, to one already suspicious. Sidney.

SUSPICIOUSNESS. n. f. [from suspicious.]
Tendency to suspicion.

To make my estate known seemed impossible, by reason of the suspiciousness of Miso, and my young mistress. Sidney.

SUSPIRATION. n. f. [suspiratio, from suspiro, Lat.] Sigh; act of fetching the breath deep.

Not customary suits of solemn black,
Nor windy suspiration of forced breath,
That can denote me truly. Shakspeare.

In deep suspirations we take more large gulpha of air to cool our heart, overcharged with love or forrow. Merc.

TO SUSPIRE. v. n. [suspiro, Lat.]

1. To sigh; to fetch the breath deep.
2. It seems in Shakspeare to mean only, to begin to breathe; perhaps mistaken for respire.

Since the birth of Cam, the first male child,
To him that did but yesterday suspire,
There was not such a gracious creature born. Shakspeare.

TO SUSTAIN. v. a. [soustenir, French;
sustineo, Latin.]

1. To bear; to prop; to hold up.

The largeness and lightness of her wings and tail sustain her without assistance. Merc.

Vain is the force of man,
To crush the pillars that the pile sustain. Dryden.

2. To support; to keep from sinking under evil.

The admirable curiosity and singular excellency of this design will sustain the patience, and animate
the industry, of him who shall undertake it. Holder.

If he have no comfortable expectations of another life to sustain him under the evils in this world, he is of all creatures the most miserable. Tillotson.

3. To maintain; to keep.

What food
Will he convey up thither to sustain Himself and army? Milton.

But at our her, not she on it depends;
For she the body doth sustain and cherish. Davies.
My labour will sustain me. Milton.

4. To help; to relieve; to assist.

They charged, on pain of perpetual displeasure, neither to entreat for him, or any way sustain him. Shakspeare.

His sons, who seek the tyrant to sustain,
And long for arbitrary lords again,
He dooms to death, asserting publick right. Dryd.

5. To bear; to endure.

Can Ceyx then sustain to leave his wife,
And unconquered forsake the sweets of life? Dryd.
Shall Turnus then such endless toil sustain
In fighting fields, and conquer towns in vain? Dryden.

The mind stands collected within herself, and sustains the shock with all the force which is natural to her; but a heart in love has its foundations tapped. Addison.

6. To bear without yielding.

Sa. hariffa's beauty's wine
Which to madness doth incline;
Such a liquor as no brain
That is mortal can sustain. Waller.

7. To suffer; to bear as inflicted.

If you omit
The offer of this time, I cannot promise,
But that you shall sustain more new disgraces,
With these you bear already. Shakspeare.

Were it I thought death menac'd would evade
This my attempt, I would sustain alone
The worst and not postpone there. Milton.

SUSTAINABLE. adj. [sostenable, French, from sustain.] That may be sustained.

SUSTAINER. n. f. [from sustain.]

1. One that props; one that supports.
2. One that sustains; a supporter.

Thyself hast a sustainer been
Of much affliction in my estate. Chapman.

SUSTENANCE. n. f. [sustenance, Fr.]

1. Support; maintenance.

Scarcely allowing himself in sustenance of life,
rather than he would spend those goods for whole take only he seemed to joy in life. Shakspeare.

There are to one end timely means, as for the sustenance of our bodies many kinds of food, many sorts of raiment to clothe our nakedness. Holder.

Is then the honour of your daughter of greater moment to her, than to my daughter her's, while sustenance it was? Addison.

SUSTENTATION. n. f. [sustentation, Fr.
from sustento, Latin.]

1. Support; preservation from falling.

These streams once raised above the earth, have their ascent and sustentation aloft promoted by the air. Boyle.

2. Use of victuals.

A very abstemious animal, by reason of its fagacity and latancy in the winter, will long subsist without a visible sustentation. Brown.

3. Maintenance; support of life.

When there be great thionst people, which go on to populate, without foreseeing means of life and sustentation; it is of necessity that once in an age they discharge a portion of their people upon other nations. Locke.

SUSURRATION. n. f. [from susuro, Lat.]

- Whisper; soft murmur.

SUTE. n. f. [for sute.] Sort. I believe only misprinted.

Touching matters belonging to the church of Christ, thus we conceive, that they are not of the state. Hobbes.

How soon doth man decay!
 When cloths are swaddled from a chest of sweets,
 To swaddle infants, whose young breath
 Scarce knows the way.

These cloths are little wadding sheets,
 Which do consign and send them unto death.

They swaddled me up in my night-gown with long pieces of linen, till they had wrapt me in about a hundred yards of swathe. Ad. yon.

To beat; to cudgel. A low ludicrous
 word.

Great on the bench, great in the saddle,
 But could as well bind o'er as swaddle. Hudb.

SWADDLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Clothes bound round the body.

I begged them to unlace me: no, no, say they,
 and upon that carried me to one of their houses, and put me to bed in all my swaddles. Addison.

From thence a tury their unweeting rest,
 There as thou slept'st in tender swaddling-band,
 And her bale eith broad there for thee left:
 Such men do changelings call, for changed by fairies their. Spenser.

That great baby you see there is not yet out of his swaddling-cloths. Shakespeare.

The swaddling-bands were purple, wrought with gold. Dryden.

To SWAG. v. n. [swigan, Saxon; swigian, Islandick.] To sink down by its weight;
 to hang heavy.

They are more apt, in swagging down, to pierce with the points, than in the jacent posture, and choose the wall. Hutton.

Being a tall fish, and with his sides much compressed, he hath a long fin upon his back, and another answering to it upon his belly; by which he is the better kept upright, or from swagging on his sides. Green.

To SWAGE. v. a. [from affwage.] To ease;
 to lessen; to mitigate.

Apt words have pow'r to swage
 The humours of a troubled mind,
 And ease as balm to tender'd wounds. Milton.

For wanting pow'r to mitigate and swage,
 With levan touches, troubled thoughts, and a chafe Anguish, and doubt, and tear from mortal minds. Milton.

I will love thee.
 Though my distracted senses should forsake me,
 I'd find some intervals, when my poor heart
 Should swage itself, and be let loose to thine. Ottway.

To SWAGGER. v. n. [swadderren, Dut.

 ion with one's own shadow? Oh thou invincible spirit of war! Shakespeare.

'Tis the rage of one that I should fight withal,
 If he be alive; a rascal that swaggered with me last night. Shakespeare.

The lesser size of mortals love to swagger for passion, and to boast infatigably of knowledge. Glennville.

Many such asses in the world ha'f, look big, stark,
 drest, cock, and swagger, at the same noisy rate.
L'Estrange.

He chuck'd,
 And scarcely design'd to set a foot to ground,
 But swagger'd like a lord. Dryden.

Confidence, how weakly forever founded, hath some root upon the ignorant, who think there is long time more than ordinary in a swagger up man, that talks of nothing but deafostration. Shelton.

To be great, is not to be flattered, and to be supercilious; to swagger at our footmen, and browbeat our inferiours. Cato.

What a pleasure is it to be victorious in a cause to swagger at the bar? for a lawyer I was born, and a lawyer I will be. Arden.

SWAN. n. f. [swan, Saxon; swan, Danish;
swan, Dutch; cygnus, Latin.]

The swan is a large water-fowl, that has a long neck, and is very white, excepting when it is young.
 Its legs and feet are black, as is its bill, which is like that of a goose, but something rounder, and a little hooked at the lower end of it. The web-bells below its eyes are black, and shining like ebony.
 Swans are wing-like fowls, which catch the wind, so that they are driven along in the water. They feed upon herbs and some sort of grain like a goose, and have been said to have lived three hundred years.
 There is a species of swan with the feathers of their heads, toward the beak, marked at the ends with a gold colour inclining to red. The swan is reckoned by the ancients, the noblest creatures; but it was consecrated to Apollo the god of music, because it was said to sing melodiously when it was near expiring; a tradition generally received, but incorrect. Cuvel.

With unsteinted eye
Compare her face with fons that I shall show;
And I will make thee think thy swan a crow.

Shakespeare.

Let music sound, while he doth make his choice;
Then if he lose, he makes a swan-like end.

Shakespeare.

The fearful nations raise a screaming cry,
Old feeble men with fainter groans reply,
A jarring sound retorts, and mingles in the sky,
Like that of swans remurmuring to the floods.

Dryden.

The idea which an Englishman signifies by the name swan, is a white colour, long neck, black beak, black legs, and whole feet, and all these of a certain size, with a power of swimming in the water, and making a certain kind of noise.

Locke.

SWAN'SKIN. n. f. [swan and skin.] A kind of soft flannel, imitating for warmth the down of a swan.

SWAP. adv. [ad suppa, to do at a snatch, Islandick.] Hastily; with hasty violence; as, he did it swap. It seems to be of the same original with swEEP. A low word.

To SWAP. v. a. To exchange. See To SWOP.

SWARD. n. f. [fiard, Swedish.]

1. The skin of bacon.
2. The surface of the ground; whence green sward, or green fiard.

Water kept too long broken and softens the fiard, makes it subject to rutches and coarse grass.

Note on Tupper.

The noon of night was past, and then the toe Came dreadful o'er the level fiard, that lies Between the wood and the swift screaming Ouse.

A. Phillips.

To plant a vineyard in July, when the earth is very dry and combustible, plow up the fiard, and burn it.

Mortimer.

A swarm of bees that cut the liquid sky,
Upon the topmost branch in clouds alight. Dryden.

2. A multitude; a crowd.
From this swarm of fair advantages,
You grip'd the general way into your hand.

Shakespeare.

If we could number up those prodigious swarms that had settled themselves in every part of it, they would amount to more than can be found.

Addison.

This swarm of themes that settles on my pen,
Which I, like summer-flies, shake off again,
Let others sing.

Young.

To SWARM. v. n. [ſwæpm, Saxon; ſwermen, Dutch.]

1. To rise as bees in a body, and quit the hive.

All hands employ'd,
Like labouring bees on a long summer's day;
Some sound the trumpet for the rest to swarm.

Dryden.

Swarm'd on a rotten stick the bees I spied. Gay.
When bees hang in swarming time, they will presently rise, if the weather hold.

Mortimer.

2. To appear in multitudes; to crowd; to throng.

The merciless Macdonel,
The multiplying villanies of nature
Do swarm upon.

Shakespeare.

Our superfluous lacqueys, and our peasants,
Who in unnecessary action swarm
About our squares of battle.

Shakespeare.

What a multitude of thoughts at once
Awaken'd in me swarm, while I consider
What from within I feel myself, and hear
What from without comes often to my ears! Mit.

Then mounts the throne, high plac'd before the firm;

In crowds around the swarming people join.

Dryden.

3. To be crowded; to be overrun; to be thronged.

These garrisons you have now planted throughout all Ireland, and every place swarms with soldiers.

Spenser.

Her lower region swarms with all sort of fowl,
her rivers with fish, and her seas with whole floods.

Howell.

Those days swarmed with fables, and from such grounds took hints for fictions, panting the world ever after.

Brown.

Late swarms with ills, the boldest are afraid,
Where then is tidings for a tender maid?

Young.

4. To breed multitudes.
Not to thick swarm'd once the soil
Bedropp'd with blood of Gorgon.

Milton.

5. It is used in conversation for climbing a tree, by embracing it with the arms and legs.

SWARTH. } [ſwært, Saxon; ſwart,
Dutch.]

1. Black; darkly brown; tawny.
A nation strange, with visage ſwart,
And courage fierce, that all men did affray.

Spenser.

Through the world then ſwart'd in every part.

A man

Of ſwart complexion, and of crabbed hue,
That him full of melancholy did hue.

Spenser.

Whereas I was black and ſwart before;
With those clear rays which the infus'd on me,
That beauty am I blest with, which you see.

Shakespeare.

No goblin, or ſwart fairy of the mine,
Hath hostile power o'er true virginity.

Milton.

2. In Milton it seems to signify gloomy;
malignant.

Ye valleys low,

On whose fresh lap the ſwart star sparsely looks.

Milton.

SWARTHLY. adj. [See SWART.] Dark of complexion; black; dusky; tawny.

Set me where, on some pathless plain,
The ſwarthy Africans complain.

Johnson.

Though in the torrid climates the common colour is black or ſwarthy, yet the natural colour of the temperate climates is more transparent and beautiful.

Hale.

Here ſwarthy Charles appears, and there
His brother with dejected air.

Addison.

Did they know Cato, our remotest kings
Would pour embattled multitudes about him;
Their ſwarthy hosts would darken all our plains,
Doubling the native horror of the war,
And making death more grim.

Addison.

SWASH. n. f. [A cant word.] A figure, whose circumference is not round, but oval; and whose moldings lie not at right angles, but oblique to the axis of the work.

Moxon.

As harle in ſwatches may fill it thereby.

Tupper.

SWATH. n. f. [ſwade, Dutch.]

1. A line of grass cut down by the mower.
With toiling and raking, and setting on cow,
Grass, lately in ſwaths, is meat for an ox. Tupper.
The strawy Greeks, ripe for his edge,
Fall down before him, like the mower's ſwath.

Shakespeare.

As soon as your grass is mown, if it be thick in the ſwath, neither air nor sun can pass freely through it.

Mortimer.

2. A continued quantity.
An affection'd air, that cures state without boots,
and utters it by great ſwaths.

Shakespeare.

3. [ſwēban, to bind, Saxon.] A band; a fillet.

An Indian comb, a sick whereof is cut into three, sharp and round teeth four inches long; the other part is left for the handle, adorned with fine ſwath laid along the sides, and lapped round about it a several distinct ſwaths.

G.

wield any thing easily: as, to ſway the sceptre.

Glancing fire out of the iron play'd,
As sparks from the anvil rise,
When heavy hammers on the wedge are ſwath'd.

Spenser.

2. To bias; to direct to either side.
Heav'n forgive them, that to much have ſwath'd
Your majesty's good thoughts away from me.

Shakespeare.

I took your hands: but was, indeed,
Swath'd from the point, by looking down on Cato.

Shakespeare.

The only way to improve our own,
By dealing faithfully with none;
As bowls run true by being made,
On purpose false, and to be ſwath'd.

Hale.

When examining these matters, let not temper and little advantages ſway you against a more durable interest.

Tupper.

The will of man is by his reason ſwath'd.

Shakespeare.

And reason says you are the worthier man.

Shakespeare.

On Europe thence, and where Rome was to ſway
The world.

Milton.

A gentle nymph, not far from hence,
That with moist curb ſways the smooth serene stream,

Milton.

Sabrina is her name.

Take heed, for passion sways
The judgment of a man, which else free will
Would not admit. Milton.
The judgment is swayed by passion, and stored with lubricious opinions, instead of clearly conceived truths. Glanville.

This was the rare
To sway the world, and land and sea subdue. Dryd.
With these I went,
Nor idle flood with unassisting hands,
When savage beasts, and men's more savage bands,
Their virtuous rail subdu'd; yet those I sway'd
With powerful speech: I spoke, and they obey'd. Dryden.
They will do their best to persuade the world that no man acts upon principle, that all is swayed
by particular malice. Davenant.

Of battle. Milton.

4. Power; rule; dominion.

His lord had some fear that the filling up the seats in the consistory with so great number of laymen, was but to please the minds of the people, to the end they might think their own sway somewhat. Hooker.

Only retain

The name and all the addition to a king;
The law, revenue, execution of the best,
Beloved sons, be yours. Shakespeare.

Her father counts it dangerous

That she should give her sorrow so much sway,
As his wisdom hastes our marriage,
To stop the inundation of her tears. Shakespeare.

Truly, Famerlane's successors they;
I think a world too little for his sway. Dryden.

The post of honour is a private station. Addison.

5. Influence; direction; weight on one side.

In the end, very few excepted, all became subject to the sway of time; other odds there was none, Seeing that some fell sooner, and some later, from the shackles of belief. Hooker.

An evil mind in authority doth not only follow
the sway of the desires already within it, but frames to new desires not before thought of. Sully.

The yuck along, the rattling woods give way,
The branches bend before their sweepy sway. Dryden.

To SWEAR. v. n. pret. swore or suare;
part. pass. sworn. [swaran, Gothick;
speruan, Saxon; sweeren, Dutch.]

1. To obtest some superiour power; to enter an oath.
In a man vow a vow unto the Lord, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond, he shall not break his word. Numbers.

These, those an hundred languages shall claim,
And savage Indians swear by Anna's name. Ticket.

2. To declare or promise upon oath.
We shall have old swearing
That they did give the rings away to men;
But we'll outface them, and outwear them too. Shakespeare.

I gave my love a ring, and made him swear
Never to part with it; and here he stands,
I dare be sworn for him, he would not leave it,
Nor pluck it from his finger. Shakespeare.

I would have kept my word,
But, when I swear, it is irrevocable. Shakespeare.
Jacob said, swear to me; and he swore unto him Gentils.

Bacchus taken at Rhodes by Demetrius Polior-cetes, which he so esteemed, that, as Plutarch reports, he swore he had rather lose all his father's images than that table. Peacham.

3. To give evidence upon oath.
At what else
Might corrupt minds procure knives as corrupt
To swear against you? Shakespeare.

4. To obtest the great name profanely.
Because of swearing the land mourns. Jer.
Obey thy parents, keep thy word gently, Swear not. Shakespeare.

None so nearly disposed to scoffing at religion, as those who have accustomed themselves to swear on trifling occasions.
Hark! the shrill notes transpire the yielding air,
And teach the neighbouring echoes how to swear. Young.

To SWEAR. v. a.
1. To put to an oath; to bind by an oath administered.

Moses took the bones of Joseph; for he had sworn to the children of Israel. Exodus.
Sworn afore, man, like a duck, I can swim like a duck, I'll be sworn. Shakespeare.

Let me swear you all to ferrety,
Appl. to conceal my shame, conceal my life. Dryd.

2. To declare upon oath: as, he swore treason against his friend.

3. To obtest by an oath.
Now, by Apollo, king, thou swear'st thy gods in vain.
—O vassal! miscreant! Shakespeare.

SWEARER. n. f. [from swear.] A wretch who obtests the great name wantonly and profanely.

And mark they all he hang'd that swear and he
—I very one
—Who mark hang them?
—Why, the honest men.
—Then the huns and swearers are fools; for there are huns and swearers now to beat the honest men, and hang them up. Shakespeare.

Take not his name, who made thy mouth, in
vain:
It gets thee nothing, and hath no excuse;
Lust and wine plead a pleasure, advance a gain,
But the clean swearer through his open shame
Lets his soul run for naught. Herbert.

Of all men a philosopher should be no swearer, for an oath, which is the end of all controversies in law, cannot determine any here, where reason only must induce. Bacon.

It is the opinion of our most refined philosophers, that the same oath or curse cannot, consistently with true piety, be repeated above nine times in the same company by the same person. Seyt.

SWEAT. n. f. [sweat, Saxon; suet,
Dutch.]

1. The matter evacuated at the pores by heat or labour.

Sweat is salt in taste; for that part of the non-riment which is fresh and sweet, turneth into blood and flesh; and the sweat is that part which is excerned, Bacon.

Some insensible effluvia, exhaling out of the pores, comes to be checked and condensed by the air on the superficies of it, as it happens to sweat on the skins of animals.
Soft on the flow'ry herb I found the hail
In balmy sweat. Milton.

2. Consisting of sweat.
And then, to once, and to content,
Such cleanliness from head to heel,
No humorous frosts, or trowly freins,
No noxious whiffs, or scaly freins. Swift.

3. Laborious; toilsome.
Those who labour
The sweat of their brows, who edge the crooked file,
Bend stubborn steel, and harken glowing armour, Acknowledge Vulcan's aid. Pope.

When Lucina brandishes his pen,
And flashes to the face of guilty men,
A cold sweat stands in drops on every part;
And rage succeeds to tears, revenge to smart. Dryden.

Sweat is produced by changing the balance between the fluids and solids, in which health consists,
so as that projectile motion of the fluids overcome the resistance of the solids. Arbuthnot.

2. Labour; toil; drudgery.
This painful labour of abridging was not easy,
but a matter of sweat and watching. Macraebes.
The field
To labour calls us, now with sweat impos'd. Milton.

What from Jenson's oil and sweat did flow,
Or what more early nature did bestow
On Shakespeare's gentler muse, in these full grown Their graces both appear. Danham.

3. Evaporation of moisture.
Beans give in the mow, and therefore those that are to be kept are not to be thrashed till March, that they have had a thorough sweat in the mow. Montimer.

To SWEAT. v. n. preterit sweat, sweated;
part. pass. sweaten. [from the noun.]

1. To be moist on the body with heat or labour.
Let them be free, carry them to your heirs,
Why sweat they under burthens? Shakespeare.
Mum's Page at the door, hurrying and blowing, and looking wildly, would needs speak with you. Shakespeare.

When he was brought again to the bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgment, he was surpris'd
With such an agony, he sweat extremely. Shakespeare.
About this time in Autumn, there reigned in the city and other parts of the kingdom a disease then new, which, of the accidents and manner thereof, they called the sweating sickness. Bacon.

A young tall youth
Did from the camp at first bring him;
At first he did, but scarce could follow him.
Sweating beneath a shield's murky weight. Cowley.

2. To toil; to labour; to drudge.
How the drudging goblin sweat
To earn his cream bowl duly set;
When in one night, ere duple of morn,
His shoddy had bathed thrice the corn. Milton.

Our author, not content to see
That others write as carelessly as he;
Though he pretends not to make things complete,
Yet, to please you, he'd have the poets sweat. Waller.

3. To emit moisture.
Wantcoats will sweat so that they run with water. Bacon.
In cold evenings there will be a moisture or sweating upon the stool. Montimer.

To SWEAT. v. a.
1. To emit as sweat.
Grease that's sweaten
From the mother's gibbet, throw
Into the flame. Shakespeare.
For him the rich Arabia sweats her gums. Dryden.

2. To make to sweat.
SWEATER. n. f. [from sweat.] One that sweats, or makes to sweat.
SWETTY. adj. [from sweat.]
1. Covered with sweat; moist with sweat.
The rabblement hooted and clapp'd their choppy'd hails, and threw up their filthy night-caps. Shakespeare.
A scaly reaper from his tillage brought
First-fruits, the green ear, and the yellow sheaf. Milton.

To SWEEP. v. a. pret. and part. pass. swept.

[ppapan, Saxon.]

1. To drive away with a besom.
2. To clean with a besom.
What woman, having ten pieces of silver, if she lose one, doth not sweep the house, and seek diligently till she find it? Luke.
3. To carry with pomp.
Let frantick Talbot triumph for a while,
And, like a peacock, sweep along his tail. Shaksp.
4. To drive or carry off with celerity and violence.

Though I could,
With barefac'd power, sweep him from my sight,
And bid my will avouch it; yet I must not. Shaksp.

The river of Kilron swept them away. Julian.
The blustering winds striving for victory swept the snow from off the tops of those high mountains, and cast it down into the plains in such abundance, that the Turks lay as men buried alive. Knolles.

Flying bullets now
To execute his rage appear too slow;
They miss or sweep but combat in souls away;
For such a loss Opdum his life must pay. Waller.
My looking is the fire of pestilence,
That sweeps at once the people and the prince. Dryden.

I have already swept the stakes, and with the common good fortune of the generous gamblers can be content to sit. Dryden.

Is this the man who drives me before him
To the world's ridge, and sweeps me off like rubbish? Dryden.

Foot! time no change of motion knows;
With equal speed the torrent flows
To sweep fame, power, and wealth away;
The past is all by death posset,
And frugal fate that guards the rest,
By giving, bids them live, to-day. Fenton.
A duke holding in a great many hands, drew a huge heap of gold; but never observed a sharper, who under his arm swept a great deal of it into his hat. Suigt.

5. To pass over with celerity and force.
6. To rub over.

Their long descending train
With rubies edg'd and sapphires swept the plain. Dryden.

7. To strike with a long stroke.
Defend, ye nine; defend, and sing;
The breathing instruments inspire,
Wake into voice each silent string,
And sweep the sounding lyre. Pope.

To SWEEP. v. n.

1. To pass with violence, tumult, or swiftness. Perhaps in the first quotation we should read swoop.

Haste me to know it, that I with wings as swift
As meditation or the thoughts of love
May sweep to my revenge. Shakspere.

A poor man that oppresseth the poor, is like a sweeping rain which leaveth no food. Proverbs.

Come in her course
Tow'rd the Sabrian shores, as sweeping from her source, Takes Towa. Drayton.

Before tempestuous winds arise,
Stars shooting through the darkness gold the night
With sweeping glories, and long trails of light
Dryden.

2. To pass with pomp; to pass with an equal motion.

She sweeps it through the court with troops of ladies,
More like an empress than duke Humphrey's wife. Shakspere.

Ingentle dreams I often will be by,
And sweep along before your closing eye. Dryden.

3. To move with a long reach.

Nor always errs; for on the countlet draws
A sweeping stroke along the crackling jaws. Dryd.

SWEEP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of sweeping.
2. The passage of any violent or continuing motion.

A door drags, when, by ill hanging on its hinges, or by the ill boarding of the room, the bottom edge of the door rides in its sweep upon the floor. Mozon.

A torrent swell'd

With wintry tempests, that disdains all mounds, Breaking away impetuous, and involves Within its sweep, trees, houses, men. Philips.

3. Violent and general destruction.

In countries subject to great epidemical sweeps, men may live very long, but where the proportion of the chronicl distemper is great, it is not likely to be so. Girault.

4. Direction of any motion not rectilinear.

Having made one mention a little curculily, began a second, bringing it with an opposite sweep to meet the other. Shaksp.

SWEEPER. n. f. [from sweep.] One that sweeps.

SWEEPINGS. n. f. [from sweep.] That which is swept away.

Should this one broomstick enter the scene, covered with dust, though the sweepings of the finest lady's chamber, we should deprecate its vanity. Swift.

SWEEPNET. n. f. [from sweep and net.] A net that takes in a great compass.

She was a sweepnet for the Spanish ships, which happily fell into her net. Camden.

SWEEPSTAKE. n. f. [from sweep and stake.] A man that wins all.

Is't writ in your revenge,

That sweepstake you will draw both friend and foe,
Winner and loser? Shakspere.

SWEEPLY. adj. [from sweep.] Passing with great speed and violence over a great compass at once.

Their rush along, the rattling woods give way,
The branches bend before their sweepy sway. Dryden.

SWEEP. adj. [prete, Sax. foet, Dutch.]

1. Pleasing to any sense.

Sweet expresses the pleasant perceptions of almost every sense; sugar is sweet, but it hath not the same sweetness as music; nor hath music the sweetness of a rose, and a sweet prospect differs from them all; nor yet have any of these the same sweetness as discourse, counsel, or meditation hath; yet the royal psalmist faith of a man, we took sweet counsel together; and of God, my meditation of him shall be sweet. Watts.

2. Luscious to the taste.

This honey tasted still is ever sweet. Davies.

3. Fragrant to the smell.

Balm his soul head with warm distilled waters,
And burn sweet wood, to make the lodging sweet. Shakspere.

Where a rainbow hangeth over or toucheth,
there breatheth a sweet smell; for that this happeneth but in certain matters which have some sweetness, which the dew of the rainbow draweth forth. Bacon.

Shred very small with thyme, sweet-margory, and a little warmer favour. Watson.

The balmy zephyrs, silent since her death,
Lament the ceasing of a sweeter breath. Pope.

The streets with triple voices ring,
To tell the bounteous product of the spring;
Sweet-smelling flowers, and elders early bud. Gay.

4. Melodious to the ear.

The dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop. Milton.

Her speech is grac'd with sweeter sound
Than in another's song is found. Waller.

No more the streams their murmurs shall forbear,
A sweeter music than their own to hear;
But tell the reeds, and tell the vocal shore,
Fair Daphne's dead, and music is no more. Pope.

5. Beautiful to the eye.

Heavy's blest thee;
Thou hast the sweetest face I ever look'd on. Shakspere.

6. Not salt.

The white of an egg, or blood mingled with salt water, gathers the saltness, and maketh the water sweeter; this may be by adhesion. Bacon.

The faith drop with him.
Sweet waters mingle with the bitter main. Dryden.

7. Not four.

Time chaungeth fruits from more sweet to more sweet; but contrariwise, liquors, even those that are of the juice of fruit, from more sweet to more four. Bacon.

Trees whose fruit is acid last longer than those whose fruit is sweet.

When metals are dissolved in acid menstrua, and the acids in conjunction with the metal, set after a different manner, so that the compound has a different taste, much milder than before, and sometimes a sweet one; is it not because the acids adhere to the metallic particles, and thereby lose much of their activity? Newton.

8. Mild; soft; gentle.

Let me report to him
Your sweet dependency, and you shall find
A conqueror that will pray in aid for kindness. Shakspere.

The Pleiades before him danc'd, Shedding sweet influence. Mit.

Mercy has, could Mercy's self be seen,
No sweeter look than this propitious queen. Waller.

Nothing to sweeten is as our country's earth,
And joy of those, from whom we claim our birth. Chapman.

Sweet interchange of hill and valley. Milton.

Euryalus,
Than whom the Trojan host
No fairer face or sweeter air could boast. Dryden.

10. Not stale; not stinking; as, that meat is sweet.

SWEEP. n. f.

1. Sweetness; something pleasing.

Pluck out

The multitudinous tongue, let them not lick
The sweet which is their poison. Shakspere.

What softer sounds are these salute the ear,
From the large circle of the hemisphere,
As if the center of all sweets met here? Ben. Jon.

If every sweet, and every grace,
Must fly from that forsaken face. Carr.

Hail! wedded love,
Perpetual fountain of domestic sweets! Milton.

Taught to live
The easiest way; nor with perplexing thoughts
To interrupt the sweet of life. Mit.

Now since the Larian and the Trojan brood
Have tasted vengeance, and the sweets of blood, Speak. Dryden.

Can Ceyx then sustain to leave his wife,
And unconcern'd forsake the sweets of life? Dryden.

We have so great an abhorrence of pain, that a little of it extinguishes all our pleasures, a little bitter mingled in our cup leaves no relish of the sweet. Locke.

Love had ordain'd that it was Adam's turn
To mix the sweets, and smother the am. Pope.

2. A word of endearment.

Sweet! leave me here a while;
My spirits grow dull, and fain I would beguile
The tedious day with sleep. Shakspere.

Wherefore frowns my sweet?
Have I too long been absent from the lip? Ben. Jon.

3. A perfume.

As, in perfumes,
Tis hard to say what scent is uppermost;
Nor this part musk or civet can we call,
Or amber, but a rich relief of all: Dryden.

So the was all a sweet.

Flowers
Innumerable, by the lost tooth-west
Open'd, and gather'd by religious hands, Rebound their sweets from the adornings of ment. Pope.

SWEEPSTREAD. n. f. The pincers of the calf.

Never tie yourself always to eat meats of easy digestion, as want, pullets, or sweet-meats. Flower.

Sweet east and culms were with flowers prick'd
About the sides; unbibbing what they deck'd. Dryden.

 That facetens all the place; she is the guest
 On rarest price. Sidney.

Here is the smell of the blood still: all the perfumes of Arabia will not faceten this little hand.
Shakespeare.

Give me an ounce of civet to faceten my imagination. Shakespeare.

With fairest flow'rs, Fidelo,
 I'll faceten thy laid grave. Shakespeare.

Be humbly minded, know your post;
faceten your tea, and watch your toast. Swift.

2. To make mild or kind.

All kindnesses defend upon such a temper, as rivers of fresh waters falling into the main sea;
 the sea swallows them all, but is not changed or faceten by them. South.

Devotion softens his heart, enlightens his mind,
facetens his temper, and makes every thing that comes from him instructive, amiable, and affecting.
Law.

3. To make less painful.

She, the sweetness of my heart, even facetens the death which her sweetness brought upon me.

Thou shalt secure her helpless sex from harms,
 And she thy cares will faceten with her charms.
Dryden.

Interest of state and change of circumstances may have facetened these reflections to the pulber but little sold meat for men. Addison.

and their toes grasp any thing very strongly. Desh.

SWIFTLY, adv. [from swift.] Fleetly; rapidly; nimbly; with celerity; with velocity.

These move swiftly, and at great distance; but then they require a medium well disposed, and their transmission is easily stopped. Bacon.

Pleas'd with the passage, we slide swiftly on,
And see the dangers which we cannot shun. Dryden.

In decent order they advance to light;
Yet then too swiftly fleet by human sight,
And meditate too soon their everlasting flight. Prior.

SWIFTNESS, n. f. [from swift.] Speed; nimbleness; rapidity; quickness; velocity; celerity.

Let our proportions for these wars
Be soon collected, and all things thought upon,
That may with reasonable swiftness add
More feathers to our wings. Shakespeare.

We may compare
By violent swiftness that which we run at;
And lose by over-running. Shakespeare.

Speed to describe whole swiftness number. Milton.

Exulting, till he finds their nobler sense
Their disproportion'd speed does recompense;
Then curses his conspiring feet, whose leant
Betrays that safety which their swiftness lent. Deane.

Such is the mighty swiftness of your mind,
That, like the earth's, it leaves our sense behind. Dryden.

TO SWOP. v. a. [Of uncertain derivation.]
To change; to exchange one thing for another. A low word.

When I drove a thrust home, he put it by;
And cried, as in derision, spare the stripping;
Oh that infusing word! I would have swopp'd
Youth for old age, and all my life behind,
To have been then a momentary man.
Dryden.

SWORD. n. f. [from swerd, Saxon; swerd,
Dutch.]

1. A weapon used either in cutting or thrusting; the usual weapon of fights hand to hand.

Old unhappy traitor, the sword is out
That must destroy thee.
Shakespeare.

Each man took his sword, and slew all the males.
Genji.

But the sword
Of Michael from the armoury of God
Was giv'n him temper'd so, that neither keen Nor solid might resist that edge: it met
The sword of Satan with steep force to smite Descending, and in half cut thee; nor stay'd,
But with swift wheel reverse, deep entering shar'd
All his right side: then Satan first knew pain,
And with'd him to and fro convolv'd; so fore
The griding sword with discontinuous wound
Puls'd through him.
Milton.

2. Destruction by war: as fire and sword.
The sword without, and terror within.
Deut.

3. Vengeance of justice.
Justice to merit does weak aid afford,
She quits the balance, and renews the sword.
Dryden.

4. Emblem of authority.
Thus I, her sword bearer, do carry,
For civil deed and military Hudibras.

Agonist a sworder.
Shakespeare.

SWORDFISH. n. f. [from sword.] A fish with a long sharp bone issuing from his head.
A swordfish small him from the rest did under,
That in his throat him pricking tottly under,
His wide aby's him forced forth to spew.
S. enser.

Malpighian observed the middle of the optick nerve of the swordfish to be a large membrane, folded,
according to its length, in many doubles, like a fan.
Derham.

Our little fleet was now engag'd to far,
That like the swordfish in the whale they fought;
The combat only seem'd a civil war,
Till through their bowels we our passage wrought.
Dryden.

SWORDGRASS. n. f. [gladiolus.] A kind of sedge; glader.

SWORDKNOT. n. f. [sword and knot.]
Riband tied to the hilt of the sword.

Wigs with wigs, swarm with swarm,
Drive,
Beans banish beans, and coaches coaches drive.

SWORDLAW. n. f. Violence; the law by which all is yielded to the stronger.
So violence

Proceeded, and oppression, and swordlaw,
Through all the plains, and refuge none was found.
Milton.

SWORDMAN. n. f. [sword and man.]
Soldier; fighting man.

Worthy fellows, and like to prove most sworn sworndmen.
Shakespeare.

At Lecca's house,
Among your sworndmen, where so many associates
Both of thy mischief and thy madness met.
Ben Jonson.

Essex was made lieutenant-general of the army,
the darling of the sworndmen.
Clarendon.

SWORDDPLAYER. n. f. [sword and play.]

publick his skill at the weapons by fighting prizes.

These they called swordplayers, and this swordplay
a swordfight.
Hakewell.

SWORN. The preterit of swear.
How soon unsay
What feign'd submission swore.
Milton.

SWORN. The participle passive of swear.
What does else want credit, come to me,
And I'll be sworn 'tis true.
Shakespeare.

I am sworn brother, sweet,
To grin necessity; and be and I
Will keep a league till death.
Shakespeare.

They that are mad against me, are sworn against me.
Hakewell.

He refused not the civil offer of a Phoenix, though his sworn enemy; and would cut at the ble of those who fought his ruin.
Colony.

To shelter innocence,
The nation all elects some patron-knight,
sworn to be true to love, and slave to fame,
And many a valiant chief enrols his name.
Groom.

SWUM. The pret. and part. pass. of swim.
Air, water, earth,
By fowl, fish, beast, was swum, was swum, was walk'd
Milton.

Frequent.
SWUNG. The pret. and part. pass. of swing.
Her hand within her hair the wound,
Swung her to earth, and dragg'd her on the ground.
Addison.

SYN. adj. [properly fib, rib, Saxon.] Related by blood. The Scottish dale still retains it.

If what my grandire to me said, be true,
Siker I am very syn to you.
Spenser.

SYCAMINE. n. f. A tree. The sycamore
SYCAMORE. } of scripture is not the same with ours.

Sycamore is our acer majus, one of the kinds of maples: it is a quick grower.
Mortimer.

If ye had faith as a grain of mustard-seed, ye might say unto this sycamine tree, be thou plucked up, and it should obey you.
Lact.

I was no prophet, but an herdsman, and a gatherer of sycamore fruit.
Hakewell.

Go to yonder sycamore-tree, and hide your battle of drink under its hollow root.
Hakewell.

Sycamores with cypressine were spread,
A hedge about the sides, a covering over head.
Dryden.

SYCOPHANT. n. f. [συκοφαντης, sycophanta, Latin.] A talebearer; a make bate; a malicious parasite.

Accusing sycophants of all men, did best last to his nature; but therefore not seeming sycophants because of no evil they said; they could bring up new or doubtful thing unto him, but such as already he had been apt to determine; so as they came but as proofs of his wisdom, fearful and more sworn while the fear he had figured in his mind had say possibility of event.
Shakespeare.

Man, however, though he holds all these qualities, with the impudent sycophant, at the same time, both declines to them, and in his sleeve laughs at them as believing. South.

TO SYCOPHANT. v. n. [συκοφαντώ; from the noun.] To play the sycophant. A low bad word.

The sycophanting arts being detected, that game is not to be played the second time; whereas a man of clear reputation, though his barque be split, has something left towards setting up again.

Government of the Tongue.

SYCOPHANTICK. adj. [from sycophant.] Talebearing; mischievously officious.

TO SYCOPHANTISE. v. n. [συκοφαντίζω; from sycophant.] To play the talebearer. Dict.

SYLLABICALLY. adv. [from syllabical.] In a syllabical manner.

SYLLABLE. n. f. [συλλαβή; syllabe, French.]

1. As much of a word as is uttered by the help of one vowel, or one articulation. I heard.

Each syllable that breath made up between them. Shakespeare.

There is that property in all letters of aptness to be conjoined in syllables and words, through the voluble motions of the organs from one stop or figure to another, that they modify and discriminate the voice without appearing to discontinue it. Holder.

2. Any thing proverbially concise.

Abraham, Job, and the rest that lived before any syllable of the law of God was written, did they not live as much as we do in every action not commended? Hooker.

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow, Crops in this potty pace from day to day, To the last syllable of recorded time; And all our yesterdays have lighted fools The way to dusty death. Shakespeare.

He hath told to many melancholy stories, with one one syllable of truth, that he hath blunted the edge of my fears. Sieff.

TO SYLLABLE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To utter; to pronounce; to articulate. Not in use.

Airy tongues that syllable men's names On sands and shores, and desert wildernesses. Milton.

SYLLABUM. n. f. [rightly SILLABUM, which see.] Milk and acids.

No syllabums made at the milking pail, But what are compos'd of a pot of good ale. Beaumont.

Two lines would express all they say in two pages: 'tis nothing but whipt syllabus and froth, without solidity. Felton.

SYLLABUS. n. f. [συλλαβός.] An abstract; a compendium containing the heads of a discourse.

SYLLOGISM. n. f. [συλλογισμός; syllogisme, French.] An argument composed of three propositions: as, every man thinks; Peter is a man, therefore Peter thinks.

A piece of rhetoric is a sufficient argument of logic, an apologue of Atrop beyond a syllogism in Barbara. Brown.

What a miraculous thing should we count it, if the fire and the steel, instead of a few sparks, should chance to knock out definitions and syllogisms! Bentley.

SYLLOGISTICAL. adj. [συλλογιστικός; from syllogism.] Relating to a syllogism; consisting of a syllogism.

Though we suppose subject and predicate, and copula, and propositions and syllogistical conclusions in their reasoning, there is no such matter; but the latter business is at the same moment present with them, without deducing one thing from another. Hale.

Though the terms of propositions may be complex, yet where the composition of the whole argument is thus plain, simple, and regular, it is properly called a simple syllogism, since the complexion does not belong to the syllogistical form of it. Hale.

SYLLOGISTICALLY. adv. [from syllogistical.] In the form of a syllogism.

A man knows first, and then he is able to prove syllogistically; so that syllogism comes after knowledge, when a man has no need of it. Locke.

TO SYLLOGIZE. v. n. [syllogizer, French; συλλογίζω.] To reason by syllogism.

Logic is, in effect, an art of syllogizing. Baker. Men have endeavour'd to transform logic into a kind of mechanism, and to teach boys to syllogize, or frame arguments and refute them, without real knowledge. Watts.

SYLVAN. adj. [better sylvan.] Woody; shady; relating to woods.

Cedar and pine, and fir and branching palm, A sylvan scene! and, as the ranks ascend, Shade above shade, a woody theatre Of statest view. Milton.

Eternal greens the mossy margin grace, Watch'd by the sylvan genius of the place. Pope.

SYLVAN. n. f. [sylvain, French.] A wood-god, or deity; perhaps sometimes a rustic.

Her private orchards, wall'd on ev'ry side, To lawless sylvans all access deny'd. Pope.

SYMBOL. n. f. [symbole, Fr. σύμβολον; symbolum, Latin.]

1. An abstract; a compendium; a comprehensive form.

Beginning with the symbol of our faith, upon that the author of the gloss enquires into the nature of faith. Baker.

2. A type; that which comprehends in its figure a representation of something else. Salt, as incorruptible, was the symbol of friendship; which, if it casually fell, was accounted ominous, and their amity of no duration. Pecan.

Words are the signs and symbols of things; and as, in accounts, ciphers and figures pass for real sums, so words and names pass for things themselves. South.

The heathens made choice of those lights as apt symbols of eternity, because, contrary to all sublunary beings, though they seem to perish every night, they renew themselves every morning. Addison.

SYMBOLICAL. adj. [symbolique, French; συμβολικός; from symbol.] Representative; typical; expressing by signs; comprehending something more than itself.

By this encroachment idolatry first crept in, men converting the symbolical use of idols into their proper worship, and receiving the representation of things unto them as the substance and thing itself. Brown.

The sacrament is a representation of Christ's death, by such symbolical actions as himself appointed. Taylor.

SYMBOLICALLY. adv. [from symbolical.]

Typically; by representation.

This distinction of animals was hieroglyphic, in the inward sense implying an abundance from certain uses, symbolically indicated from the nature of those animals. Brown.

It symbolically teaches our duty, and promotes charity by a real signature, and a sensible sermon. Taylor.

SYMBOLIZATION. n. f. [from symbolize.] The act of symbolizing; representation; resemblance.

The hieroglyphical symbols of scripture, excellently intended in the species of things sacrificed in the dreams of Pharaoh, are oftentimes racked beyond their symbolizations. Brown.

TO SYMBOLIZE. v. n. [symbolizer, Fr. from symbol.] To have something in common with another by representative qualities.

Our king finding himself to symbolize in many things with that king of the Hebrews, honoured him with the title of this foundation.

The pleasing of colour symbolizeth with the pleasing of any single tone to the ear; but the pleasing of order doth symbolize with harmony.

Antiole and the seasons have taught, that air and water, being symbolizing elements, in the quality of moisture, are easily transmutable into one another. Boyle.

They both symbolize in this, that they live to look upon themselves through multiplying passion. Hewel.

I affectedly symbolized in careless mirth and freedom with the liberties, to circumvent liberation. More.

The soul is such, that it strangely symbolizes with the thing it mightily desires. South.

TO SYMBOLIZE. v. a. To make representative of something.

Some symbolize the same from the mystery of its colours. Drum.

SYMMETRIAN. n. f. [from symmetry.] One eminently studious of proportion.

His face was a thought longer than the exact symmetrian would allow. Sidney.

SYMMETRICAL. adj. [from symmetry.] Proportionate; having parts well adapted to each other.

SYMMETRIST. n. f. [from symmetry.] One very studious or observant of proportion.

Some exact symmetrists have been blamed for being too true. Wotton.

SYMMETRY. n. f. [symmetrie, Fr. συμμετρία; and μέτρον.] Adaption of parts to each other; proportion; harmony; agreement of one part to another.

She by whose lines proportion should be Exam'd, measure of all symmetry; Whom had that ancient seer, who thought souls made

Of harmony, he would at next have said That harmony was she. Dennet.

And in the symmetry of her parts is found A power, like that of harmony and sound. Waller.

Symmetry, equality, and correspondence of parts, is the discernment of reason, not the object of sense. More.

Nor were they only animated by him, but their measure and symmetry were owing to him. Dryden.

SYMPATHETICAL. adj. [sympathetique, Fr. from sympatheia.] Having mutual sensation; being affected either by what happens to the other; feeling in consequence of what another feels.

Hecumenon are grounded the great mistakes in the cure of diseases, not only from sympathetick receipts, but amulets, charms, and all incantatory applications. Brown.

United by this sympathetick bond, You grow familiar, intimate, and good. Hescomen.

To confer at the distance of the Indies by sympathetick conveyances, may be as usual to future times as to us in a literary correspondence. Glennville.

To you our author makes her first request, Who speak the kindest, and who write the best: Your sympathetick hearts she hopes to move, From tender friendship and endearing love. Prior.

All the ideas of sensible qualities are not inherent in the inanimate bodies; but are the effects of their motion upon our nerves, and sympathetick and vital passions produced within ourselves. Bentley.

SYMPATHETICALLY. adv. [from sympathetick.] With sympathy; in consequence of sympathy.

S Y M

To SYMPATHIZE. v. n. [Sympathizer, Fr. from sympathy.]

1. To feel with another; to feel in consequence of what another feels; to feel mutually.

The men sympathize with the mallice in robustious and rough coming on. Shakespeare.

The thing of courage,
As round with rage, with rage doth sympathize.
Shakespeare.

Nature, in awe to him,
Hath do'd her gaudy trim,
With her great mailer to sympathize. Milton.

The limbs of his body is to every one a part of himself: he sympathizes, and is concerned for them. Lacke.

Their countrymen were particularly attentive to all their story, and sympathized with their heroes in all their adventures. Spectator.

Though the great acts of their mind exempt them from fear, yet none could do and sympathize more heartily. Collier.

2. To agree; to fit. Not proper.

Green is a pleasing colour, from a blue and a yellow mixed together, and by consequence blue and yellow are two colours which sympathize. Dryden.

SYMPATHY. n. f. [Sympathie, Fr. συμπάθεια.] Fellow-feeling; mutual sensibility; the quality of being affected by the affection of another.

A world of earthly blessings to my soul,
If sympathy of love unite our thoughts. Shakespeare.
You are not young; no more am I; go to, then, there's sympathy: you are merry, so am I; ha! ha! then there's more sympathy: you love sack, and so do I; would you desire better sympathy? Shakespeare.

But what it is,
The action of my life is like it, which I'll keep,
If but for sympathy. Shakespeare.

I started back;
It started back: but, pleas'd, I soon return'd;
Pleas'd it return'd as soon, with answering looks
Of sympathy and love. Milton.

They saw, but other sight instead, a crowd
Of ugly serpents; horror on them fell,
And horrid sympathy. Milton.

Or sympathy, or some connat'ral force,
Pow'rit at greatok distance to unite,
With secret amity, things of like kind,
By secretest conveyance. Milton.

There never was any heart truly great and generous, that was not also tender and compassionate: it is this noble quality that makes all men to be of one kind; for every man would be a distinct species to himself, were there no sympathy among individuals. Scott.

Can kindness to desert like your's be strange?
Kindness by secret sympathy is ty'd;
For noble souls in nature are ally'd. Dryden.

There are such affections mix'd in the minds of most men; and to this might be attributed most of the sympathies and antipathies observable in them. Lacke.

SYMPHONIOUS. adj. [from symphony.] Harmonious; agreeing in sound.

Up he rode,
Follow'd with acclamation and the sound
Symphonious of ten thousand harps, that tun'd Angelick harmonies. Milton.

SYMPHONIC. n. f. [Symphonic, Fr. σύν and φωνή.] Concert of instruments; harmony of mingled sounds.

A learned searcher from Pythagoras's school, where it was a maxim that the images of all things are latent in numbers, determines the concert proportion between breadths and heights, reducing symmetry to sympphony, and the harmony of sound to a kind of harmony in sight. Wotton.

Speak, ye who best can tell, ye sons of light,
Angels! for ye behold him, and with songs
And choral symphonies, day without night, Circle his throne rejoicing. Milton.

The trumpet's sound,
And warlike sympphony is heard around;
The marching troops through Athens take their way;
The great earl marshal orders their array. Dryden.

S Y N

SYMPHYISIS. n. f. [σύν and φάσις.]

Symphyisis, in its original signification, denotes a connascency, or growing together; and perhaps is meant of those bones which in young children are distinct, but after some years unite and consolidate into one bone. Wisejan.

SYMPOSIAC. adj. [Sympsiac, Fr. συμπόσιος.] Relating to merrymakings; happening where company is drinking together.

By desiring a secrecy to words spoke under the rose, we only mean in society and comotation, from the ancient custom of symposiac meetings to wear chaplets of roses about their heads. Brown.

In some of those symposiac disputations amongst my acquaintance, I assumed that the dietetick part of medicine depended upon scientific principles. Arbutnot.

SYMPTOM. n. f. [Symptome, French; σύμπτωμα.]

1. Something that happens concurrently with something else, not as the original cause, nor as the necessary or constant effect.

The symptoms, as Dr. Sydenham remarks, which are commonly febrilitick, are often nothing but the principles or seeds of a growing, but unripe gout. Blackmore.

2. A sign; a token.

Ten glorious campaigns are passed, and now, like the sick man, we are expiring with all sorts of good symptoms. Sieft.

SYMPTOMATICAL. } adj. [Symptom-
SYMPTOMATICK. } tique, Fr. from symptom.] Happening concurrently or occasionally.

Symptomatikal is often used to denote the difference between the primary and secondary causes in diseases; as a fever from pain is said to be symptomatikal, because it arises from pain only; and therefore the ordinary means in fevers are not in such cases to be had recourse to, but to what will remove the pain; for, when that ceases, the fever will cease, without any direct means taken for that. Quincy.

By fomentation and a cataplasin the swelling was dissipated; and the fever, then appearing but symptomatikal, lessened as the heat and pain mitigated. Wisejan.

SYMPTOMATICALY. adv. [from symptomatikal.] In the nature of a symptom.

The causes of a hube are vicious humours abounding in the blood, or in the nerves, excreted sometimes critically, sometimes symptomatically. Wisejan.

SYNAGOGICAL. adj. [from synagogue.] Pertaining to a synagogue.

SYNAGOGUE. n. f. [Synagogue, Fr. συναγωγή.] An assembly of the Jews to worship.
Go, Tubal, and meet me at our synagogue. Shakespeare.

As his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath. Goff, cl.

SYNALIPIA. n. f. [συναλοιπή.] A contraction or excision of a syllable in Latin verse, by joining together two vowels in the scanning, or cutting off the ending vowel; as, ill' ego.

Vugil, though smooth, is far from affecting it: he frequently uses synalepsis, and concludes his sense in the middle of his verse. Dryden.

SYNARTHROSIS. n. f. [σύν and ἄρθρον.] A close conjunction of two bones.

There is a conspicuous motion where the conjunction is called diarthrosis, as in the elbow; an obscure one, where the conjunction is called synarthrosis, as in the joining of the carpus to the metacarpus. Wisejan.

SYNCHONDROSIS. n. f. [σύν and χόνδρος.] Synchondrosis is an union by gristle, of the sternon to the ribs. Wisejan.

S Y N

SYNCHRONICAL. adj. [σύν and χρονικός.]

Happening together at the same time.
It is difficult to make out how the air conveyed into the left ventricle of the heart, the systole and diastole of the heart and lungs being far from synchronical. Boyle.

SYNCHRONISM. n. f. [σύν and χρονισμός.] Concurrence of events happening at the same time.

The coherence and synchronism of all the parts of the Mosical chronology, after the flood, bear a most regular testimony to the truth of his history. Halt.

SYNCHRONOUS. adj. [σύν and χρονικός.] Happening at the same time.

The variations of the gravity of the air keep both the solids and fluids in an oscillatory motion, synchronous and proportional to their changes. Arbutnot.

SYNCOPE. n. f. [Syncope, Fr. συνκοπή.]

1. Fainting fit.
The symptoms attending gunshot wounds are pain, fever, delirium, and syncope. Wisejan.

2. Contraction of a word by cutting off a part in the middle.

SYNCOPIST. n. f. [from syncope.] Contractor of words.

To outline all the modern syncopists, and to roughly content my English readers, I intend to publish a Spectator that shall not have a single vowel in it. Spectator.

To SYNDICATE. v. n. [Syndiquer, Fr. σύν and δικάω.] To judge; to pass judgment on; to censure. An unusual word. Not in use.

Aristotle undertook to censure and syndicate his master, and all law-makers before him. Hakewill.

SYNDROME. n. f. [σύνδρομή.] Concurrent action; concurrence.

All things being linked together by an uninterrupted chain of causes, every single motion owes a dependance on such a syndrome of prequired motions. Glanville.

SYNECDOCHE. n. f. [Synecdoche, Fr. συνεκδοχή.] A figure by which part is taken for the whole, or the whole for part.

Because they are instruments of grace in the hand of God, and by these his holy spirit changes our hearts; therefore the whole work is attributed to them by a synecdoche; that is, they do in a manner the work for which God ordained them. Taylor.

SYNECDCHICAL. adj. [from synecdoche.] Expressed by a synecdoche; implying a synecdoche.

Should I, Lindamer, bring you into hospitals, and shew you there how many souls narrowly led, and synecdochical bodies, see then carbon cages moulder away to dust, those miserable persons, by the loss of one limb after another, surviving but part of themselves, and living to see themselves dead and buried by piecemeal? Engle.

SYNEURYSIS. n. f. [σύν and ὕψος.]

Syneurysis is when the connexion is made by a ligament. Of this in symplysis we find many in the connexion of the ossa pubis together, especially in women, by a ligamentous substance. In articulation, it is either round, as that which unites the head of the os femoris to the coxa; or broad, as the tendon of the patella, which unites it to the os tibiae. Wisejan.

SYNOD. n. f. [Synode, Fr. σύνδος.]

1. An assembly called for consultation: it is used particularly of ecclesiasticks. A provincial synod is commonly used, and a general council.

The glorious gods sit in hourly synod about thy particular prosperity. Shakespeare.

Since the mortal and intestine jars
Twixt thy feditious countrymen and us
It hath in solemn synod been decreed,
T' admit no traffick to our adverse towns. Shakespeare.

The episcopate was not only condemned by the synod, but imputed to the emperor as extreme mad-ness. Bacon.

Flou-bitten synod, an assembly brew'd Of clerks and elders ana, like the rude Chans of presbytry, where laymen guide, With the tame woolpack clergy by their side. Cleveland.

His royal majesty, according to these presbyterian rules, shall have no power to command his clergy to keep a national synod. White.

Well have ye judg'd, well ended long debate, Squad of gods! and, like to what ye are, Great things resolve'd. Milton.

Let us call to synod all the blest Through heav'n's wide bounds. Milton. The second council of Nice, he saith, Fust irreverently call that wise synod; upon which he falls into a very tragical exclamation, that I should dare to reflect to much dishonour on a council. Stillingfleet.

Parent of gods and men, propitious Jove! And you bright synod of the powers above, On this my son your gracious gifts bestow. Dryden.

Conjunction of the heavenly bodies.

How'er love's native hours are set, Whatever starry synod met, 'Tis in the mercy of her eye, If poor love shall live or die. Crahan. Their planetary motions and aspects Of various efficacy, and when to join In synod unbewg. Milton.

As the planets and stars have, according to astrologers, in their great synods, or conjunctions, much more powerful influences on the air than are ascribed to one or two of them out of that aspect; so divers particulars, which, whilst they lay scattered among the writings of several authors, were inconsiderable, when they come to be laid together, may oftentimes prove highly useful to physiology in their conjunctions. Boyle.

SYNODAL. n. f. [from synod.] Money paid anciently to the bishop, &c. at Easter visitation.

SYNODAL. adj. [from synod.] Money paid anciently to the bishop, &c. at Easter visitation.

SYNODICAL. adj. [from synod.] Money paid anciently to the bishop, &c. at Easter visitation.

SYNODICK. adj. [from synod.] Money paid anciently to the bishop, &c. at Easter visitation.

Relating to synod; transacted in a synod.

The various dignity of their several churches, and of their many functions, rules, and orders in them, by reason of the frequency of their synodical and provincial meetings, have necessarily raised many questions of place among them. Selden.

St Athanasius writes a synodical epistle to those of Antioch, to compose the differences among them upon the ordination of Paulinus. Stillingfleet.

[Synodique, Fr.] Reckoned from one conjunction with the sun to another.

The diurnal and annual revolutions of the sun, to us are the measures of day and year; and the synodick revolution of the moon measures the month. Holder.

The moon makes its synodical motion about the earth in twenty-nine days twelve hours and about forty-four minutes. Locke.

SYNODICALLY. adv. [from synodical.] By the authority of a synod or publick assembly.

It shall be needful for those churches synodically to determine something in those points. Saunderson.

The alterations made by the commissioners were brought to the convocacion, then sitting, where they were synodically agreed upon. Nelson.

They owe no other dependance to the first than what is common to the whole syntax of beings. Glanville.

2. That part of grammar which teaches the construction of words.

I can produce a hundred instances to convince any reasonable man, that they do not to much as understand common grammar and syntax. Swift.

SYNTHE'SIS. n. f. [from synthesis.] The act of joining; opposed to analysis.

The synthesis consists in assuming the causes discovered and established as principles and by them explaining the phenomena proceeding from them and proving the explanations. Newton.

SYNTHETICK. adj. [from synthesis.] Conjoining; compounding; forming composition; opposed to analytick.

Synthetic method is that which begins with the parts, and leads onward to the knowledge of the whole: it begins with the most simple principles and general truths, and proceeds by degrees to that which is drawn from them, or compounded of them, and therefore it is called the method of composition. Watts.

SYPHON. n. f. [This should be written siphon; σῖφων.] A tube; a pipe.

Take your glass, siphon, or crane; and draw it off from its last faces into small bottles. Martimer.

SYRINGE. n. f. [σῖριγξ.] A pipe through which any liquor is squirted.

The heart seems not designed to be the fountain or conservatory of the vital flame, but as a machine to receive the blood from the veins, and force it out by the arteries through the whole body, as a syringe doth any liquor, though not by the same artifice. Ray.

To SYRINGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To spout by a syringe.

A flux of blood from the nose, mouth, and eye, was stop'd by the syringing up of oxyerate. Hygemen.

The spirits that are in all tangible bodies are scarce known: sometimes they take them for vacuum, whereas they are the most active of bodies.

Bacon

He took himself to have deserved as much as any man, in contributing more, and appearing looser in their first approach towards reflection. A. C. Camden Is a man unfortunate in marriage? Still it is because he was deceived; and so took that for virtue and affection which was nothing but vice in a disguise. South.

Depraved appetites cause us often to take that for true imitation of nature which has no resemblance of it. Dryden.

So let his treasures, fill'd with trickling pearl,
Doubt his sex, and take him for a girl. Tate.
Time is taken for so much of infinite duration as is measured out by the great bodies of the universe.

Locke.

They who would advance in knowledge should lay down this as a fundamental rule, not to take words for things. Locke.

Few will take a proposition which amounts to no more than this, that God is pleased with the doing of what he himself commands, for an innate moral principle, since it teaches to little. Locke.

Some Tories will take you for a Whig, some Whigs will take you for a Tory. Pope.

As I take it, the two principal branches of preaching are, to tell the people what is their duty, and then to convince them that it is so. Swift.

The children of thy people still talk against thee.
Ezekiel.
Here free from court-compliances he walks.
And with himself, his best adviser, talks.
As God remembers that we are but flesh, unable to hear the nearer approaches of divinity, and so talks with us as once with Moise through a cloud;
so he forgets not that he breathed into us the breath of life, a vital active spirit.
Mention the king of Spain, he talks very notably;
but if you go out of the Gazette you drop him.
Decay of Piety.

5. To prattle; to speak impertinently.

Hypocrites audaciously talk
Of purity.
My heedless tongue has talk'd away this life
Milton.

Consider well the time when Petavius first began to talk in that manner.
Waterland.

3. To give account.

The crystalline sphere, whose balance weighs
The trepidation talk'd.
The natural histories of Switzerland talk much of the fall of these rocks, and the great damage done.
Milton.

We will consider whether Adam had any such heir as our author talks of.
Addison.

4. To speak; to reason; to confer.

Let me talk with thee of thy judgments.
Jeremiah.

Will ye speak wickedly for God, and talk deceitfully for him?
Job.

It is a difficult task to talk to the purpose, and to put life and perspicuity into our discourses.
Talking over the things which you have read with your companions, fixes them upon the mind.
Collier.

TALK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Oral conversation; fluent and familiar speech.

We do remember; but our argument
Is too heavy to admit much talk.
Perceiving his soldiers dismayed, he forbade them to have any talk with the enemy.
Shakespeare.

How can he get wisdom that driveth oxen, is occupied in their labours, and whose talk is of bul-locks?
Kneller.

This ought to weigh with those whose reading is designed for much talk and little knowledge.
In various talk the instructive hours they pass,
Who gave the ball, or paid the visit last.
Locke.

2. Report; rumour.

I hear talk up and down of raising our money.
as a means to return our wealth, and keep our money from being carried away.
Pope.

3. Subject of discourse.

What delight to be by such extoll'd,
To live upon their tongues and be their talk,
Of whom to be despis'd were no small pride?
Milton.

TALK. n. f. [talce, Fr.] A kind of stone.

Stones composed of plates are generally parallel, and flexible and elastic: as, talk, cat-silver or glimmer, of which there are three sorts, the yellow or golden, the white or silvery, and the black.
Boissac.

Venetian talk kept in a heat of a glass furnace, though brittle and discoloured, had not lost much of its bulk, and seemed nearer to talk than mere earth.
Boyle.

TALKATIVE. adj. [from talk.] Full of prate; loquacious.

If I have held you overlong, lay hardly the fault upon my old age, which in its disposition is talkative.
Shakespeare.

This may prove an instructive lesson to the disaffected, not to build hopes on the talkative zealots of their party.
Addison.

I am assured I cannot make a quicker progress in the French, where every body is so courteous and talkative.
Addison.

The coromond bird is talkative and grave,
That from his cage cries cuckold, whore, and knaves;
Pope.

Though many a passenger he rightly call,
You hold him no philosopher at all.
Pope.

TALKATIVENESS. n. f. [from talkative.]

Loquacity; garrulity; subsels of prate.

T A L

We call this talkativeness a feminine vice; but he that shall appropriate loquacity to women, may perhaps sometimes need to light Diogenes's candle to seek a man.
Government of the Tongue.

Learned women have lost all credit by their impertinent talkativeness and conceit.
Swift.

TALKER. n. f. [from talk.]

1. One who talks.
Let me give for instance some of those writers or talkers who deal much in the worst nature or taste.
Watts.

2. A loquacious person; a prattler.

Keep me company but two years,
Thou shalt not know the sound of thine own tongue.
—Farewell; I'll grow a taller for this year.
Shakespeare.

If it were desirable to have a child a more talk-talker, ways might be found to make him so; but a wife father had rather his son should be silent when a man, than pretty company.
Locke.

3. A boaster; a bragging fellow.

The greatest talkers in the days of peace have been the most pusillanimous in the day of temptation.
Taylor.

TALKY. adj. [from talk.] Consisting of talk;
resembling talk.

The talky flakes in the firsts were all formed before the subsidence, along with the land.
Woodward.

TALL. adj. [tall, Welsh.]

1. High in stature.

Bring word, how tall the is.
Two of nobler shape,
Erect and tall.
Milton.

2. High; lofty.

Winds rush'd abroad
From the four hinges of the world, and fell
On the vast wilderness, whose tallest pines,
Though rooted deep as high, and sturdied oaks,
How'd their stiff necks.
Milton.

They lop, and lop, on this and that hand, cutting away the tall, sound, and substantial timber, that used to shelter them from the winds.
Darvanc.

May they encrease as fast, and spread their boughs,
As the high fame of their great owner grows!

May he live long enough to see them all
Dark shadows cast, and as his palace tall!
Methinks I see the love that shall be made,
The lovers walking in that am'rous shade.
Weller.

3. Sturdy; bulky.

I'll swear thou art a tall fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt not be drunk; but I know thou art no talker of thy hands, and that thou wilt be drunk, but I would thou wouldst be a tall fellow of thy hands.
Shakespeare.

TALLAGE. n. f. [tailloge, French.] Imposition; excise.

The people of Spain were better affected unto Philip than to Ferdinand, because he had imposed upon them many taxes and tallages.
Baron.

TALLOW. n. f. [talge, Danish.] The grease or fat of an animal; coarse suet.

She's the kitchen wench, and all grease; and I know not what use to put her to, but to make a lump of her, and run from her by her own light.
I warrid her rags, and the tallow in them, will burn a Lapland winter.
Shakespeare.

The new world is stocked with such store of kine and bulls, brought hither out of Europe since the first discovery, that the Spaniards kill thousands of them yearly, for their tallow and hides only.
Hendin.

Snuff the candles close to the tallow, which will make them run.
Swift.

TO TALLOW. v. a. [from the noun.] To grease; to smear with tallow.

TALLOWCHANDLER. n. f. [tallow and chandelier, Fr.] One who makes candles of tallow, not of wax.

Nastiness, and several nasty trades, as tallowchandlers, butchers, and neglect of cleansing of gotters, are great occasions of a plague.
Harvey.

TALLY. n. f. [from taller, to cut, Fr.]

1. A stick, notched or cut in conformity to another stick, and used to keep ac- counts by.

So right his judgment was cut fit,
And made a tally to his wit.
The only talents in esteem at present are those of Exchange Alley; one tally is worth a grove of bays.
Hudibras.

Have you not seen a baker's maid
Between two equal pauniers sway'd?
Her tallies usefule he and idle,
It plac'd exactly in the middle.
Prior.

From his rug the skew'r he takes,
And on the stick ten equal notches makes;
With just resentment flings it on the ground,
There take my tally of ten thousand pound.
Swift.

2. Any thing made to suit another.

So suited in their minds and persons,
That they were fram'd the tallies for each other,
It may alien love had interpos'd,
It must have been an eye-love to beholders.
Deley.

TO TALLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To fit; to suit; to cut out, so as to answer
any thing.

Not sister either had, nor brother,
They seem'd just tally'd for each other.
They are not so well tallied to the present
tor.
Prior.

TO TALLY. v. n. To be fitted; to con- form; to be suitable.

I found pieces of tiles that exactly tallied with the channel.
Addison.

TALMUD. } n. f. The book containing the Jewish traditions, the rabbinical constitutions and explications of the law.

TALNESS. n. f. [from tall.] Height of stature; procerity.

An hideous giant, horrible and high,
That with his talness seem'd to threat the sky.
Spenser.

The eyes behold to many naked bodies, as be talness of stature could hardly be equalled in any country.
Hayward.

TALON. n. f. [talon, Fr.] The claw of a bird of prey.

It may be tried, whether birds may not be made to have greater or longer talons.
Upward the noble bird directs his wing,
And, towing round his master's earth-born loe,
Swift he collects his fatal flock of pre,
Lifts his fierce talon high, and darts the forked be.
Prior.

TAMARIND tree. n. f. [tamarindus, Lat.]

The flower of the tamarind-tree consists of seven leaves, which are to be placed as to resemble a papianaceous one in some moisture; but these expand circularly, from whose many-leaved flower-stem rises the pointal, which afterward becomes a flat pod, containing many flat angular seeds surrounded with an acid blackish pulp.
Lenitives are cassia, tamarinds, manna
Lay me recline'd
Beneath the spreading tamarind, that shades,
Fann'd by the breeze, its fever-cooling fruit.
Thomson.

TAMARISK. n. f. [tamarice, Lat.]

The flowers of the tamarisk are not common.
Tamarisk is a tree that grows tall, and its wood is medicinal.
Müller.

TAMBARANT. n. f. [tambourin, Fr.] A tabour; a small drum. It should be tambourin.

Calliope with nuptial moe,
Soon as thy watch pipe began to sound,
Their ivory lutes and tambourines forego.
Spenser.

TAME. adj. [tame, Sax. tæm, Dutch; tam, Danish.]

1. Not wild; domestic.

Thou art the Mithras child, That of all wild beasts is tyrant in the world, and of all tame beasts a slave.

Addison.
Crushed; subdued; depressed; dejected;
spiritless; heartless.

If you should need a pin,
You could not with more tame a tongue desire it.

Shakespeare.
And now their pride and mettle is asleep,
Their courage with hard labour tame and dull.

Shakespeare.
A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
And pregnant to good pity.

Shakespeare.
Proud lips, each savage furious beast,
That on his shores do daily feast;
And you, tame slaves of the laborious plough,
Your weary knees to your Creator bow.

Rayconmon.
Spiritless; unanimated: as, a tame poem. A low phrase.

To TAME. v. n. [gatamgan, Gothick;
tamean, Sax. tammen, Dutch.]

1. To reduce from wildness; to reclaim;
to make gentle.

Those that tame wild horses,
Pace 'em not in their hands to make 'em gentle;
But stop their mouths with stubborn bits.

Shakespeare.
To subdue; to crush; to depress; to conquer.

If the heavens do not their visible spirits
Send quickly down to tame the offences,
Humanity must perforce prey on itself.

Shakespeare.
They cannot tame
Or overcome their riches; not by making bath, orchards, fish-pools, letting in of seas
Here, and then there forcing them out again.

Ben Jonson.
A puling enckold, would drink up
The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece.

Shakespeare.
A race unconquer'd, by their climate made bold,
be Caledonians, arm'd with want and cold,
have been for ages kept for you to tame.

Waller.
TAMEABLE. adj. [from tame.] Suscep-tive of taming.

Ganzas are supposed to be great fowls, of a strong light, and easily tameable; divers of which may be brought up as to join together in carrying the weight of a man.

Wilkins.
TAMELY. adv. [from tame.] Not wildly;
meanly; spiritlessly.

True obedience, of this madness cur'd,
Stoop tamely to the foot of majesty.

Shakespeare.
What courage tamely could to death content,
And not by striking lift the blow prevent?

Dryden.
Once a champion of renown,
So tamely can you bear the ravish'd crown?

Dryden.
Has he given way?
Did he look tamely on, and let them pass?

Addison.
Can you love and reverence your prelate, whom you tamely suffer to be abused?

Swift.
TAMENESS. n. f. [from tame.]

1. The quality of being tame; not wildness.

2. Want of spirits; timidity.

Such a conduct must appear rather like tameness than beauty, and expose his authority to insults.

Rogers.
TAMER. n. f. [from tame.] Conqueror;
subduer.

He, great tamer of all human art,
Dulness! whose good old cause I yet defend.

Pope.
TAMING. n. f. A woollen stuff.

TAMING. n. f. The stopple of the mouth of a great gun.

To TAMPER. v. a. [of uncertain derivation, derived by Skinner from tempero,
Latin.]

VOL. II.

1. To be busy with physick.

As in vain
To tamper with your crazy brain.
Without tramping of your skull
As often as the moon's at full.

Hudibras.
He tried waxes to bring him to a better complexion, but there was no good to be done; the very tampering cast him into a disease.

L'Estrange.
2. To meddle; to have to do without fitness or necessity.

That key of knowledge, which should give us entrance into the recesses of religion, is by so much tampering and wrenching made useless.

Decay of Piety.
'Tis dangerous tampering with a muse,
The profits small, and you have much to lose:
For though true wit adorns your birth or place,
Degenerate lines degrade the attained race.

Refconmon.
Earl Waltheof being overtaken with wine, engaged in a conspiracy: but, repenting next morning, repaired to the king, and discovered the whole matter: notwithstanding which he was beheaded upon the defeat of the conspiracy, for having but thus far tampered in it.

Addison.
3. To deal; to practise secretly.

Others tamper'd
For Fleetwood, Desborough, and Lambert.

Hudibras.
To TAN. v. a. [tannen, Dutch; tanner,
French.]

1. To impregnate or imbue with bark.

A human skull covered with the skin, having been buried in some limy soil, was tanned or turned into a kind of leather.

Ureus.
Black cattle produce tallow, hides, and beef;
but the greatest part of the hides are exported raw for want of bark to tan them.

Swift.
They sell us their bark at a good price for tanning our hides into leather.

Swift.
2. To imbrown by the sun.

His face all tann'd with scorching sunny ray,
As he had travell'd many a summer's day
Through boiling sands of Araby and Ind.

Spenser.
Like sun-parch'd quarters on the city gate,
Such is thy tann'd skin's lamentable state.

Donne.
A brown for which heaven would disband
The galaxy, and stars be tann'd.

Cleveland.
TAN for taken, ta'en. Ill spelt.

Two trophies tane from th' east and western shore,

And both those nations twice triumphed o'er.

May.
TANG. n. f. [tanghe, Dutch, acrid.]

1. A strong taste; a taste left in the mouth.

Sin taken into the soul, is like a liquor poured into a vessel; so much of it as it fills it also fea-sons: so that although the body of the liquor should be poured out again, yet still it leaves that tang behind it.

South.
It is strange that the soul should never once re-cal over any of its pure native thoughts, before it borrowed any thing from the body; never bring into the waking man's view any other ideas but what have a tang of the cask, and derive their original from that union.

Locke.
2. Relish; taste. A low word.

There was not the least tang of religion, which is indeed the worst affectation in any thing he said or did.

Atterbury.
3. Something that leaves a sting or pain
behind it.

She had a tongue with a tang,
Would cry to a sailor, Go hang.

Shakespeare.
4. Sound; tone: this is mistaken for tone or twang.

There is a pretty affection in the Allemain, which gives their speech a different tang from ours.

Holder.
To TANG. v. n. [This is, I think, mistaken for twang.] To ring with.

Be opposite with a kinsman, furly with thy servants; let thy tongue tang arguments of state; put thyself into the trick of singularity.

Shakespeare.
TANGENT. n. f. [tangent, French; tangens, Latin.]

Tangent, in trigonometry, is a right line perpendicularly raised on the extremity of a radius, and which touches a circle in as not to cut it; but yet intersects another line without the circle called a secant, that is drawn from the centre, and which cuts the arc to which it is a tangent.

Troove.
Nothing in this hypothesis can retain the planets in their orbs, but they would immediately desert them and the neighbourhood of the sun, and vanish away in tangents to their several circles into the mundane space.

Bentley.
TANGIBILITY. n. f. [from tangible.]
The quality of being perceived by the touch.

TA'NGIBLE. adj. [from tango, Lat.] Perceptible by the touch.

Tangible bodies have no pleasure in the comfort of air, but endeavour to subact it into a more dense body.

By the touch, the tangible qualities of bodies are discerned, as hard, soft, smooth.

Locke.
To TA'NGLE. v. a. [See ENTANGLE.]

1. To implicate; to knit together.

2. To ensnare; to entrap.

She means to tangle mine eyes too,
'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eye balls, nor your cheek of cream,

Shakespeare.
I do, quoth he, perceive
My king is tangled in affection to
A creature of the queen's, lady Anne Bullen.

Shakespeare.
You must lay lime to tangle her desires
By wailful sonnets, whose composed rhimes
Shall be full fraught with servicable vows.

Shakespeare.
If thou retire, the dauphin, well appointed,
Stands with the suares of war to tangle thee.

Shakespeare.
Now 'y'th victorious
Among thy slain self-kill'd,
Not willingly, but tangled in the fold
Of dire necessity.

Milton.
Skill'd to retire, and in retiring draw Hearts after them, tangled in amorous nets.

Milton.
With subtle cobweb cheats,
They're catch'd in knotted law-like nets;
In which when once they are entangled,
The more they stir, the more they're tangled.

Hudibras.
3. To embroil; to embarrass.

When my simple weakness strays,
Tangled in forbidden ways,
He, my shepherd! is my guide,
He's before me, on my side.

Craha.
To TA'NGLE. v. n. To be entangled.

Shrubs and tangling bushes had perplex'd
All path of man or beast.

Anon.
TA'NGLE. n. f. [from the verb.] A knot of things interwoven in one another, or different parts of the same thing perplexed.

He leading swiftly rowl'd
In tangles, and made intricate seem straight,
To mischief swift.

Milton.
Sport with Amaryllis in the shade,
Or with the tangles of Nereus's hair.

Milton.
TA'NIST. n. f. [an Irish word; an tanisther, Erse.]

Presently after the death of any of their captains, they assemble themselves to chuse another in his stead, and nominate commonly the next brother; and then next to him do they chuse next of the blood to be tanist, who shall next succeed him in the said captainry.

Spenser.
TA'NISTRY. n. f. [from tanist.]
The Irish hold their lands by tanistry, which is no more than a personal estate for his life-time that is tanist, by reason he is admitted thereunto by election.

If the Irish be not permitted to purchase estates of freeholds, which might descend to their children, must they not continue their custom of tanis-try? which makes all their possessions uncertain.

Davies.

TAP

By the Irish custom of tansy, the chiefs of every country, and the chiefs of every sept, had no longer estate than for life in their chiefdoms; and when their chiefdoms were dead, their sons, or next heirs, did not succeed them, but their tansys, who were elective, and purchased their elections by strong hand.

TANK. n. f. [tanque, Fr.] A large cistern or basin.

Handle your prining knife with dexterity: go tightly to your business: you have cost me much, and must earn it: here's plentiful provision, and full in the garden, and water in the tank; and in holy days, the licking of a platter of rice when you deserve it.

TANKARD. n. f. [tanquard, Fr. tankard, Dutch; tancard, Irish.] A large vessel with a cover, for strong drink.

Hath his tankard touch'd your brain? Sure they're fall'n asleep again. Ben Jonson. Marius was the first who drank out of a silver tankard, after the manner of Bacchus. Arbuthnot. When any calls for ale, fill the largest tankard cup top full. Swift.

TANNER. n. f. [from tan.] One whose trade is to tan leather. Tanners use that lime which is newly drawn out of the kiln, and not slack'd with water or air. Moxon.

TANTLING. n. f. [from Tantalus.] One seized with hopes of pleasure unattainable.

Hard life, To be still hot summer's tastings, and The shivering slaves of winter. Shakespeare.

To TAP. v. a. [tappen, Dutch; tapper, French.]

1. To touch lightly; to strike gently. 2. [tappen, Dutch.] To pierce a vessel; to broach a vessel. It is used likewise of the liquor.

That blood, already like the pelican, Hath thou tapt out, and drunkenly caroused. Shakespeare.

He has been tapping his liquors, while I have been spilling my blood. Addison. Wait with patience till the tumour becomes troublesome, and then tap it with a lancet. Sharp.

TAP. n. f. [from the verb.] 1. A gentle blow.

TAP

This is the right flogging grace, tap for tap, and so part fair. Shakespeare.

Each shakes her fan with a smile, then gives her right hand woman a tap upon the shoulder. Speckator.

As at hot cockles once I laid me down, And felt the weighty hand of many a clown, Buxom gave a gentle tap. Gay.

So Hinton-leeches, when their patient lies In seventh restlessness with anclous'd eyes, Apply with gentle strokes their ozier rod, And tap by tap invite the sleepy god. Harte.

2. A pipe at which the liquor of a vessel is let out.

A gentleman was inclined to the knight of Calcoigne's distemper, upon hearing the noise of a tap running. Derham.

TAP. n. f. [tappan, Sax.] A narrow fillet or band of linen.

Will you buy any tap, or lace for your cap. My dainty duck, my dear-a? Shakespeare.

This pouch that's ty'd with taps I'll wager that the prize shall be my due. Gay.

On once a flock-bed, but repair'd with straw, With tap-ty'd curtains never meant to draw. Pope.

TAPER. n. f. [taper, Sax.] A wax candle; a light.

Get me a taper in my study, Lucius: When it is lighted, come and call me. Shakespeare.

My daughter and little for we'll dress With rounds of waxen tapers on their heads, And rattles in their hands. Shakespeare.

If any snatch the pure taper from my hand, and hold it to the devil, he will only burn his own fingers, but shall not rob me of the reward of my good intention. Taylor.

There the fair light, Like Hero's taper in the window plac'd, Such fate from the malignant air did find, As that expos'd to the boisterous wind. Waller.

To see this fleet, Heav'n, as if there waited lights above, For tapers made two glaring comets rise. Dryden.

TAPER. adj. [from the form of a taper.]

And in the sweetest finds a tediousness. Donne.

2. Wearisomeness by prolixity.

In vain we labour to persuade them, that any thing can take away the tediousness of prayer, except it be brought to the same measure and form which themselves assign.
Hooker.

3. Prolixity; length.

Since brevity's the soul of wit,
And tediousness the limbs and outward flourishes,
I will be brief.
Shakspeare.

4. Uneasiness; tincomeness; quality of wearying.

In those very actions whereby we are especially perfected in this life, we are not able to persist;
forced we are with very weariness, and that often,
to interrupt them, which tediousness cannot fall into those operations that are in the state of bliss
when our union with God is complete.
Hooker.

More than kisses, letters mingle souls,
For this friends absent speak: this ease controuls
The tediousness of my life.
Donne.

To TEEM. v. n. [team, Saxon, offspring.]
1. To bring young.

If she must teem,
Create her child of spleen, that it may live
And be a thwart distemper'd torment to her. Shakspeare.

2. To be pregnant; to engender young.

Have we more sons! or are we like to have?
Is not my teeming date drunk up with time,
And wilt thou pluck my fair son from mine age?
Shakspeare.

When the rising spring adorns the mead,
Teeming buds and cheerful greens appear. Dryden.

There are fundamental truths, the basis upon which a great many others rest: these are teeming truths, such as those, with which they furnish the mind, and, like the lights of heaven, give light and evidence to other things.
Locke.

3. To be full; to be charged as a breeding animal.

We live in a nation where there is scarce a single head that does not teem with politics. Addison.

To TEEM. v. a.

1. To bring forth; to produce.

What's the newest grief?
Each minute teems a new one. Shakspeare.

Common mother, thou Whose womb unmeasurable, and infinite breest, Teems and feeds all. Shakspeare.

The earth obey'd; and fruit
Op'ning her fertile womb, teem'd at a birth.
Milton.

Did the huge wrought high change, that the earth did not then teem forth its increase, as formerly, of its own accord, but required culture. Woodward.

2. To pour. A low word, imagined by Skinner to come from tommen, Danish, to draw out; to pour. The Scots retain it: as, teem that water out; hence Sault took this word.

Teem out the remainder of the ale into the tankard, and fill the glass with small beer. Swift.

TEEMER. n. f. [from teem.] One that brings young.

TEEMFUL. adj. [teampul, Saxon.]

1. Pregnant; prolific.

2. Brimful. Ainsworth.

TEEMLESS. adj. [from teem.] Unfruitful; not prolific.

Such wars, such waste, such fiery tracks of death,
Their zeal has left, and such a teemless earth.
Dryden.

TEEN. n. f. [tman, Saxon, to kindle; teun, Flemish, to vex; teoman, Saxon, injuries.] Sorrow; grief. Not in use.

Arrived there,
That barehead knight for dread and doleful teen
Would have had fled, he durst approach no ear.
Spenser.

Try not in heartless grief and doleful teen.

Shakespeare.

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen.
Shakespeare.

To TEEN. v. a. [from teinan, to kindle, Saxon.] To excite; to provoke to do a thing. Not in use.

TEENS. n. f. [from teen for ten.] The years reckoned by the termination teen; as, thirteen, fourteen. Spenser.

Our author would excuse these youthful teens,
Begotten at his entrance in his teens;
Some childish fancies may approve the toy,
Some like the muse the more for being a boy.
Graville.

TEETH. The plural of tooth.
Who can open the doors of his face? his teeth are terrible round about. Job.

To TEETH. v. n. [from the noun.] To breed teeth; to be at the time of dentition.

When the symptoms of teething appear, the gums ought to be relaxed by softening ointment. Arbuth.

Clip and trim those tender strings in the fashion of beard, or other hairy teguments. Brown.
Proceed by section, dividing the skin, and separating the teguments. Wijman.
In the nutmeg another tegument is the nuce between the green pericarpium and the hard shell. Hay.

To TEH-HE. v. n. [A cant word made from the sound.] To laugh with a loud and more insolent kind of cachinnation; to titter.

They laugh'd and teh-he'd with derision,
To see them take your deposition. Indibros.

TEIL tree. n. f. [tilia, Latin.] The flame with linden or lime tree.
A teel tree and an oak have their substance in them when they cast their leaves. Utah.

TEINT. n. f. [teinte, French.] Colour; touch of the pencil.

Glazed colours have a vivacity which can never be imitated by the most brilliant colours, because the different teints are simply laid on, each in its place, one after another. Dryden.

TELARY. adj. [tela, a web, Latin.] Spinning webs.

The pictures of telary spiders, and their position in the web, is commonly made lateral, and regarding the horizon; although we shall commonly find it downward, and their heads respecting the center. Brown.

TELESCOPE. n. f. [telescope, Fr. telescopio and σκοπία.] A long glass by which distant objects are viewed.

The telescope discovers to us distant wonders in the heavens, and shows the milky way, and the bright cloudy spots, in a very dark sky, to be a collection of little stars. Watts.

TELESCOPICAL. adj. [from telescope.] Belonging to a telescope; seeing at a distance.

To TELL. v. a. pret. and part. pass. told. tellan, Saxon; tellen, tellen, Dutch; talen, Danish.]

1. To utter; to express; to speak.
I will not eat till I have told mine errand. Genesis.

Thy message might in telling wound,
And in performing end us. Milton.

2. To relate; to rehearse.
I will declare what wife men have told from their fathers, and have not hid. Job.

When Gideon heard the telling of the dream, and the interpretation, he worshipped. Judges.

He longer will delay to hear thee tell His generation. Milton.

You must know; but break, O break my heart,
Before I tell my fatal story out,
Th' usurper of my throne is my wife! Dryden.
The rest are vanish'd, none repast'd the gate,
And not a man appears to tell their fate. Pope.

3. To teach; to inform.
He gently ask'd, where all the people be,
Which in that stately building wont to dwell,
Who answer'd him full fast, he could not tell. Spenser.

I told him of myself; which was as much
As to have ask'd him pardon. Shakespeare.
Tell me now, what lady is the same,
To whom you swore a secret pilgrimage,
That you to-day promis'd to tell me of? Shakespeare.
The fourth part of a shekel of silver will I give to the man of God to tell us our way. 1 Samuel.
Saint Paul tell us, we must needs be subject not only for fear, but also for conscience sake. Bishop Sanderson.

Tell me how may I know him, how adore.
Milton.

4. To discover; to betray.
They will tell it to the inhabitants. Numbers.

5. To count; to number.
Here lies the learned Savile's heir,
So early wife, and lasting fair,
That none, except her years they told,
Thought her a child, or thought her old. Waller.
Numerous falls the fearful only tell;
Courage from hearts, and not from numbers, grows. Dryden.

A child can tell twenty before he has any idea of infinite. Locke.
She doubts if two and two make four,
Though she has told them ten times o'er. Prior.

6. To make excuses. A low word.
Tush, never tell me; I take it much unkindly,
That thou, Iago, who hast had my purse
As if the fangs were thine, shouldst know of this. Shakespeare.

To TELL. v. n.

1. To give an account; to make report.
I will compass thine altar, O Lord, that I may publish with the voice of thanksgiving, and tell of all thy wondrous works. Psalms.
Ye that live and move, fair creatures! tell,
Tell, if ye saw, how came I thus, how here? Milton.

2. To TELL on. To inform of. A doubtful phrase.
David saved neither man nor woman alive, to bring tidings to Gath, saying, Let them tell on us, saying, So did David. 1 Samuel.

TELLER. n. f. [from tell.]

1. One who tells or relates.
2. One who numbers; a numberer.
3. A teller is an officer of the exchequer, of which there are four in number: their business is to receive all monies due to the king, and give the clerk of the pell a bill to charge him therewith; they also pay all persons any money payable to them by the king, by warrant from the auditor of the receipt: they also make books of receipts and payments, which they deliver to the lord treasurer. Cowell.

TELLTALE. n. f. [tell and tale.] One who gives malicious information; one who carries officious intelligence.
You speak to Cæsar, and to such a man
That is no fearing telltale. Shakespeare.

What, shall these papers lie like telltales here?
Shakespeare.
Let not the heavens hear these telltale women Rail on the Lord's mounted. Shakespeare.

'Tis done: report displays her telltale wings,
And to each ear the news and tidings brings. Fairfax.

And to the telltale sun descry
Our conceal'd solemnity. Milton.

TEMERARIOUS. adj. [temerarius, French; temerarius, Latin.]

1. Rash; heady; unreasonably adventurous; unreasonably contemptuous of danger.

Resolution without foresight is but a temerarious folly; and the consequences of things are the best point to be taken into consideration. L'Esrange.

2. Careless; heedless; done at random.
Should he find upon one single sheet of parchment an oration written full of profound sense, adorned with elegant phrase, the wit of man could not persuade him that this was done by the temerarious dabbles of an unguided pen. Re.

TEMERITY. n. f. [temeritas, Latin] Rashness; unreasonably contempt of danger.

The figures are bold even to temerity. Cowley.

To TEMPER. v. a. [tempero, Latin; temperer, French.]

1. To mix so as that one part qualifies the other.

I shall temper so Justice with mercy, as may illustrate most Them fully satisfied, and thee appease. Milton.

2. To compound; to form by mixture to quality as an ingredient.
If you could find out but a man
To bear a poison, I would temper it;
That Romeo should upon receipt thereof
Soon sleep in quiet. Shakespeare.

3. To mingle.
Prepare the sixth part of an ephah, and the third part of an hin of oil, to temper with the fine flour. Leviticus.

The good old knight, with a mixture of the talk and master of the family, tempered the manner after his own affairs with kind questions relative to themselves. Addison.

4. To beat together to a proper consistence.

Th' uncivil kerns of Ireland are in arms,
And temper clay with blood of Englishmen. Shakespeare.

The potter, tempering soft earth, fashions the vessel with much labour. Watts.

5. To accommodate; to modify.
Thy subsistence serving to the appetite of a eater, tempered itself to every man's liking. Watts.

6. To bring to due proportion; to moderate excess.

These soft fires with kindly heat
Of various influence foment and warm,
Temper or nourish. Milton.

7. To soften; to mollify; to allay.
sooth; to calm.

Solon, in his laws to the Athenians, laboured temper their warlike courage with sweet delights learning and sciences; so that as much as they excell'd in arms, the other exceeded in knowledge. Speke.

With this she wons to temper angry love,
When all the Gods he threatens with thundering love. Spenser.

Now will I to that old Andronicus,
And temper him with all the art I have. Shakespeare.
Woman! Nature made thee
To temper man: we had been brutes without thee. Shakespeare.

8. To form metals to a proper degree of hardness.

The sword
Of Michael from the armoury of God
Was given him temper'd so, that neither keen Nor solid might resist that edge. Milton.

In the tempering of steel, holding it but a minute or two longer or lesser is the other competitor.

heat, gives it very different tempers as to brittleness or toughness. Eagle.

Repeated poals they heat,
And in a heav'n serene, resplendent arms appear:
Redd'ning the skies, and glit'ring all around,
The temper'd metals clash, and yield a silver sound. Dryden.

9. To govern. A latinism.
With which the damned ghosts he governeth,
And furies rules, and Tartare tempereth. Spenser.

TEMPER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Due mixture of contrary qualities.
Nothing better proveth the excellency of this soil and temper, than the abundant growing of the pine trees. Raleigh.
Health itself is but a kind of temper, gotten and preserved by a convenient mixture of contraries. Arbutnot.

2. Middle course; mean or medium.
If the estates of some bishops were exorbitant before the reformation, the present clergy's wishes reach no further than that some reasonable temper had been used instead of pushing them so quick. Swift.

3. Constitution of body.
This body would be increased daily, being supplied from above and below; and having done growing, it would become more dry by degrees, and of a temper of greater consistency and firmness. Burnet.
4. Disposition of mind.
Thus, I shall call it evangelical, temper is far from being natural to any corrupt child of Adam. Hammond.

Remember with what mild
And gracious temper he both heard and judg'd,
Without wrath or reviling. Milton.
This will keep their thoughts easy and free, the only temper wherein the mind is capable of receiving new informations. Locke.
All irregular tempers in trade and business are but like irregular tempers in eating and drinking. Law.

5. Constitutional frame of mind.
The brain may devise laws for the blood, but a hot temper leaps o'er a cold decree. Shakespeare.
Our hearts,
Of brothers temper, do receive you in
With all kind love. Shakespeare.

6. Calmness of mind; moderation.
Rebore yourselves unto your tempers, fathers,
And without perturbation here me speak. Ben Jonson.

Teach me, like thee, in various nature wif-
To fall with dignity, with temper eise. Pope.

7. State to which metals are reduced, particularly as to hardness.
Here draw I
A sword, whose temper I intend to stain
With the best blood that I can meet withal. Shakespeare.

Ithuriel with his spear
Touch'd lightly; for no falsehood can endure
Touch of celestial temper, but returns
Offence to its own likeness: up he starts, Discover'd, and surpris'd. Milton.
These needles should have a due temper; for, if they are too soft, the force exerted to carry them through the flesh will bend them; if they are too brittle, they snap. Shawp.

TEMPERAMENT. n. f. [temperamentum,
Latin; temperament, French.]
1. Constitution; state with respect to the predominance of any quality.
Bodies are denominated hot and cold, in proportion to the present temperament of that part of our body to which they are applied. Locke.

2. Medium; due mixture of opposites.
The common law has wasted and wrought out those distempers, and reduced the kingdom to its just state and temperament. Hale.

TEMPERAMENTAL, adj. [from temperament.] Constitutional.
That temperamental dignitions, and conjecture of prevalent humours, that may be collected from spots in our nails, we concede. Brown.

Intellectual representations are received with as unequal a fate, upon a bare temperamental relish or disgust. Glanville.

TEMPERANCE. n. f. [temperantia, Lat.]
1. Moderation; opposed to gluttony and drunkenness.

Observe
The rule of not too much; by temperance taught In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from thence Due nourishment, not gluttonous delight. Milton.
Temperance, that virtue without pride, and fortune without envy, gives indolence of body and tranquility of mind; the best guardian of youth and support of old age. Temple.
Make temperance thy companion; so shall health
Sit on thy brow. Doddles.

2. Patience; calmness; sedateness; moderation of passion.
His senseless speech and doted ignorance
When as the noble prince had marked well,
He calm'd his wrath with goodly temperance. Spenser.

What, are you chaf'd?
Ask God for temperance, that's th' appliance only
Which your disease requires. Shakespeare.

TEMPERATE. adj. [temperatus, Latin.]
1. Not excessive; moderate in degree of any quality.

Use a temperate heat, for they are ever temperate heats that digest and mature; wherein we mean temperate, according to the nature of the subject;
for that may be temperate to fruits and liquors which will not work at all upon metals. Bacon.

His sleep
Was airy, light, from pure digestion bred,
And temperate vapours bland. Milton.

2. Moderate in meat and drink.
I advised him to be temperate in eating and drinking. Weyman.

3. Free from ardent passion.
So hot a speed with such advice dispos'd,
Such temperate order in to fence a course,
Doth want example. Shakespeare.
She's not forward, but modest as the dove;
She is not hot, but temperate as the morn. Shakespeare.

From temperate inactivity we are unready to put in execution the suggestions of reason. Brown.

TEMPERATELY. adv. [from temperate.]
1. Moderately; not excessively.
By winds that temperately blow,
The bark should pass secure and slow. Addison.

2. Calmly; without violence of passion.
Temperately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress. Shakespeare.

3. Without gluttony or luxury.
God esteems it a part of his service if we eat or drink; so it be temperately, and as may best preserve health. Taylor.

TEMPERATENESS. n. f. [from temperate.]
1. Freedom from excesses; mediocrity.

2. Calmness; coolness of mind.
Langley's mild temperateness
Did tend unto a calmer quietness. Daniel.

TEMPERATURE. n. f. [temperatura, tempero, Latin; temperature, French.]

1. Constitution of nature; degree of any qualities.

It lieth in the same climate, and is of no other temperature than Guinea. Abbot.
Birds that change countries at certain seasons, if they come earlier, shew the temperature of weath-ther. Bacon.

There may be as much difference as to the temperature of the air, and as to heat and cold, in one mile, as in ten degrees of latitude; and he that would cool and refresh himself in the summer, had better go up to the top of the next hill, than remove into a far more northern country. Brown.

Memory depends upon the confidence and the temperature of the brain. Watts.

2. Mediocrity; due balance of contrarie-ties.

As the world's sun doth effects beget
Diff'rent in divers places every day;
Here Autumn's temperature, there summer's heat,
Here flow'ry spring-tide, and there winter gray. Davies.

If, instead of this variation of heat, we suppose an equality or constant temperature of it before the deluge, the case would be much altered. Woodward.

3. Moderation; freedom from predominant passion.
In that proud part, which her to goodly greeteth,
Most goodly temperature you may desire. Spenser.

TEMPERED. adj. [from temper.] Disposed with regard to the passions.
When was my lord to much ungently temper'd.
To stop his ears against admittance? Shakespeare.

TEMPEST. n. f. [tempest, French; tempestas, Latin.]

1. The utmost violence of the wind; the names by which the wind is called according to the gradual increase of its force seem to be, a breeze; a gale; a gust; a storm; a tempest.

I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds
Have riv'd the knotty oaks. Shakespeare.
Some have been driven by tempest to the south. Abbot.

What at first was call'd a gust, the same Hath now a storm's, anon a tempest's name. Donne.

We, caught in a fiery tempest, shall be hurl'd
Each on his rock transfix'd. Milton.

With clouds and storms
Around thee thrown, tempest o'er tempest roll'd, Thou humblest nature with thy northern blast. Thomson.

2. Any tumult; commotion; perturbation.
The tempest in my mind
Doth from my senses take all feeling else,
Save what beats there. Shakespeare.

TO TEMPEST. v. a. [from the noun.] To disturb as by a tempest.

Part huge of bulk,
Wellowing unwetly, enormous in their gale,
Tempest the ocean. Milton.

TEMPEST-BEATEN. adj. [tempest and beat.] Shattered with storms.
In the calm harbour of her gentle breath,
My tempest-beaten soul may safely rest. Dryden.

TEMPEST-ROCK. adj. [tempest and rock.]
Driven about by storms.
Though his bark cannot be lost,
Yet it shall be tempest-tost. Shakespeare.

TEMPESTIVITY. n. f. [tempestivus, Lat.] Seasonableness.
Since their disposi- tion, the constitutions of countries admit not such tempering of harvest. Frown.

TEMPESTUOUS. adj. [tempestusus, Fr. from tempest.] Stormy; turbulent.
Tempestuous fortune hath spent all her might,
And thrilling sorrow thrown his utmost dart. Spenser.

Which of them rising with the sun, or falling,
Should prove tempestuous. Milton.

Her looks grow black as a tempestuous wind,
Some raging thoughts are rowing in her mind. Dryden.

Pompey, when dissuaded from embarking because the weather was tempestuous, replied, My voyage is necessary, my life is not so. Collier.

TEMPLAR. n. f. [from the Temple, a house near the Thames, anciently belonging to the knights templars, originally from the temple of Jerusalem.]
A student in the law.

Wis and templs ev'ry sentence raise,
And wonder with a foolish face of praise. Pope.

TEMPLE. n. f. [temple, French; templum,
Latin.]

1. A place appropriated to acts of religion.

TEM

The household gods
Throng our large temples with the shows of peace.
Shakespeare.

Here we have no temple but the wood, no altar feebly but hornbeasts.
Shakespeare.

Much sacrilegious murder hath broke open
The lord's anointed temple, and stole thence
The life of the building.
Shakespeare.

2. [temporal, Latin.] The upper part of the sides of the head where the pulse is felt.

Her sunny locks
Hang on her temples like a golden fleece. Shaksp.
We may apply intercrepents of mallich upon the temples; frontals also may be applied. Wjssman.
To procure sleep, he uses the scratching of the temples and ears; that even mollifies wild beasts.
Arbutnot.

The weapon enter'd close above his ear,
Cold through his temples glides the wounding spear.
Pope.

TEMPLET. n. f. A piece of timber in a building.

When you lay any timber on brick-work, as linteols over windows, or templets under girders, lay them in loom. Moxon.

TEMPORAL. adj. [temporal, Fr. temporalis, low Latin.]

1. Measured by time; not eternal.
As there they sustain temporal life, so here they would learn to make provision for eternal. Hooker.

2. Secular; not ecclesiastical.
This sceptre shows the force of temporal power,
The attribute to awe and majesty,
Wherein doth sit the dread of kings. Shakespeare.

All the temporal lands, which men devout
By testament hath given to the church,
Would they strip from us. Shakespeare.

All temporal power hath been wrested from the clergy, and much of their ecclesiastick. Swyft.

3. Not spiritual.
There is scarce any of those decisions but gives good light, by way of authority or reason, to some questions that arise also between temporal dignities, especially to cases wherein some of our subordinate temporal titles have part in the controversy. Selden.

Call not every temporal end a degrading of the intention, but only when it contradicts the ends of God, or when it is principally intended: for sometimes a temporal end is part of our duty; and such are all the actions of our calling. Taylor.

Prayer is the instrument of fetching down all good things to us, whether spiritual or temporal.
Duty of Man.

Our petitions to God, with regard to temporals, must be that medium of convenience proportioned to the several conditions of life. Rogers.

4. [temporal, French.] Placed at the temples, or upper part of the sides of the head.

Copious bleedings, by opening the temporal arteries, are the most effectual remedies for a phrency. Arbutnot.

TEMPORALITY. } n. f. [temporalité, TEMPORALS. } French; from temporal.] Secular possessions; not ecclesiastick rights.

Such revenues, lands, and teneaments, as bishops have had annexed to their sees by the kings and others from time to time, as they are barons and lords of the parliament. Cowell.

The residue of these ordinary finances is casual,
as the temporalities of vacant bishopricks, the profits that grow by the tenures of lands. Bacon.

The king yielded up the point, reserving the ceremony of homage from the bishops, in respect of the temporalities, to himself. Ayliffe.

TEMPORALLY. adv. [from temporal.]
With respect to this life.

Sinners who are in such a temporally happy condition, owe it not to their sins, but wholly to their luck. South.

TEMPORALTY. n. f. [from temporal.]
1. The laity; secular people.

TEM

The pope sucked out inestimable sums of money, to the intolerable grievance of clergy and temporality. Abbot.

2. Secular possessions.
TEMPORANEITY. adj. [temporis, Latin.]

Temporary. Diff.
TEMPORANESS. n. f. [from temporary.]

The state of being temporary; not perpetuity.

TEMPORARY. adj. [tempus, Latin.] Lasting only for a limited time.

These temporary truces were soon made and soon broken; he desired a truer amity. Bacon.

If the Lord's immediate speaking, uttering, and writing, doth conclude by a necessary inference, that all precepts uttered and written in this manner are simply and perpetually moral, then, on the contrary, all precepts wanting this are merely temporary. White.

The republick, threatened with danger, appointed a temporary dictator, who, when the danger was over, retired again to the community. Addison.

TEMPORIZE. v. n. [temporiser, Fr.
tempus, Latin.]

1. To delay; to procrastinate.
If Cupid hath not spent all his quiver in Venice,
thou wilt quake for this shortly.

—I look for an earthquake too then.
—Well, you will temporize with the hours.
Shakespeare.

The earl of Lincoln, deceived of the country's concourse, in which case he would have tempo-rized, resolved to give the king battle. Bacon.

2. To comply with the times, or occasions.
They might their grievance inwardly complain,
But outwardly they needs must temporize. Daniel.

3. To comply. This is improper.
The dauphin is too wilful opposite,
And will not temporize with my entreaties:
He flutly says, he'll not lay down his arms. Shak.

TEMPORIZER. n. f. [temporiseur, French;
from temporize.] One that complies with times or occasions; a trimmer.

I pronounce thee a hovering temporizer, that caust with thine eyes at once see good and evil, Inclining to them both. Shakespeare.

TEMP. v. a. [tento, Latin; tenter,
French.]

1. To solicit to ill; to incite by presenting some pleasure or advantage to the mind;
to entice.

'Tis not the king that sends you to the Tower:
My lady Gray tempts him to this harsh extremity.
Shakespeare.

You, ever gentle gods! take my breath from me;
Let not my woe for spirit tempt me again!
To die before you please. Shakespeare.

Come together, that Satan tempt you not.
1 Corinthians.

He that hath not wholly subdued himself, is quickly tempted and overcome in small things.
Bishop Taylor.

Fix'd on the fruit she gaz'd, which to behold Might tempt alone. Milton.

The devil can but tempt and deceive; and if he cannot destroy so, his power is at an end. South.

O wretched maid!
Whose roving fancy would resolve the same
With him who next should tempt her easy same.
Prior.

2. To provoke.
I'm much too vent'rous
In tempting of your patience. Shakespeare.

Your talons from the wretched and the bold;
Tempt not the brave and needy to despair:
For, though your violence should leave 'em bare
Of gold and silver, swords and darts remain. Dryden.

3. It is sometimes used without any notion of evil; to solicit; to draw.

Still his strength conceal'd
Which tempted our attempt, and wrought our fall.
Milton.

TEN

The rowing crew
To tempt a surge, clothe all their tilts in blue. Gay.

4. To try; to attempt; to venture on. I know not whether it was not originally attempt, which was vitiously written to tempt, by an elision of the wrong syllable.

This from the vulgar branches must be torn,
And to fair Proserpine the present burn,
Ere leave be giv'n to tempt the nether flames.
Dryden.

TEMPTABLE. adj. [from tempt.] Liable to temptation; obnoxious to bad influence. Not elegant, nor used.

If the parliament were as temptable as any other assembly, the managers must fail for want of tools to work with. Swift.

TEMPTATION. n. f. [tentation, French;
from tempt.]

1. The act of tempting; solicitation to ill; enticement.

All temptation to transgresses repel. Milton.
2. The state of being tempted.

When by human weakness, and the arts of the tempter, you are led into temptations, prayer is the thread to bring you out of this labyrinth. Duppa.

3. That which is offered to the mind as a motive to ill.

Set a deep glass of rhenish wine on the contrary casket; for if the devil be within, and that temptation without, he will chule it. Shakespeare.

Dare to be great without a guilty crown;
View it, and lay the bright temptation down
'Tis late to seize on all. Dryden.

TEMPTER. n. f. [from tempt.]
1. One who solicits to ill; an enticer.

These women are shrewd tempters with their tongues. Shakespeare.

Is this her fault or mine?
The tempter or the tempted, who sins most?
Not he; nor doth the tempt. Shakespeare.

Those who are bent to do wickedly, will never want tempters to urge them on.
My work is done:
She's now the tempter to ensnare his heart. Dryden.

2. The infernal solicitor to evil.
The experience of our own frailties, and the watchfulness of the tempter, discourage us. Hammond.

Foretold what would come to pass,
When first this tempter cross'd the gulf from hell.
Milton.

To this high mountain's top the tempter brought Our Saviour. Milton.

TENSE BREAD. } n. f. [tensen, Dutch;
TENSED BREAD. } tamijer, French;
tamejire, Italian, to sift; tens, Dutch;
tamis, French; tamiso, Italian, a sieve]

common.

TEMULENCY. n. f. [temulentia, Latin.]
Inebriation; intoxication by liquor.

TEMULENT. adj. [temulentus, Latin.] Inebriated; intoxicated as with strong liquors.

TEN. adj. [tyn, Saxon; tien, Dutch.]

1. The decimal number; twice five; the number by which we multiply numbers into new denominations.

Thou shalt have more Than two tens to a score. Shakespeare.

Ten hath been extolled as containing even, odd, long, and plain, quadrate and cubical numbers; and Aristotle observed, that barbarians as well as Greeks used a numeration unto ten. Brown.

With twice ten sail I cross'd the Phrygian seas, Scarce seven within your harbour meet. Dryden.

From the soft lyre,
Sweet flute, and ten-string'd instrument, require Sounds of delight. Prior.

2. Ten is a proverbial number.

There's a proud modesty in mortals,
Averse from begging; and resolv'd to pay
Ten times the gift it asks. Dryden.

Although English is too little cultivated, yet the faults are mine in ten owing to neglectation. Swift.
TENABLE, adj. [tenable, French.] Such as may be maintained against opposition;
such as may be held against attacks.

The town was strong of itself, and wanted no industry to fortify and make it tenable. Bacon.
Sir William Ogle seized upon the castle, and put it into a tenable condition. Cicero.

Infidelity has been driven out of all its outworks: the atheist has not found his post tenable, and is therefore retired into deism. Spectator.

TENACIOUS, adj. [tenax, Latin.]

1. Grasping hard; inclined to hold fast; not willing to let go: with of before the thing held.

A tenacious adherence to well-chosen principles, makes the face of a governor shine in the eyes of those that see his actions. South.

Gripping, and full tenacious of thy hold, Would'st thou the Grecian chiefs, though largely foiled,

Should give the prizes they had gain'd? Dryden.
You reign absolute over the hearts of a stubborn and stubborn people, tenacious to madness of their liberty. Dryden.

True love's a miser; so tenacious grown,
He weighs to the least gram of what's his own.

Men are tenacious of the opinions that first possess them. Locke.

He is tenacious of his own property, and ready to invade that of others. Arbuthnot.

2. Retentive.

The memory in some is very tenacious; but yet
there seems to be a constant decay of all our ideas, even of those which are struck deepest, and in minds the most retentive. Locke.

3. [tenace, French.] Having parts disposed to adhere to each other; cohesive; vis-cous; glutinous.

Three equal round vessels filled, the one with water, the other with oil, the third with molten pitch, and the liquors stirred alike to give them a vortical motion; the pitch by its tenacity will lose its motion quickly, the oil being less tenacious will keep it longer, and the water being less tenacious will keep it longest, but yet will lose it in a short time. Newton.

4. Niggardly; close-fisted; meanly parsimonious. Amfouth.

TENACIOUSLY, adv. [from tenacious.]

With disposition to hold fast.
Some things our juvenile reason tenaciously adhere to, which yet our maturer judgments disallow
of. Clarendon.

TENACIOUSNESS, n. f. [from tenacious.]

Unwillingness to quit, resign, or let go.
TENACITY, n. f. [tenacit  , French; tenacitas, tenax, Latin.] Viscosity; glutin-ousness; adhesion of one part to another.

If many contiguous vortices of molten pitch were each of them as large as those which some suppose to revolve about the sun and fixed stars, yet these and all their parts would, by their tenacity and stiffness, communicate their motion to one another till they all rested among themselves. Newton.

Substances, whose tenacity exceeds the powers of digestion, will neither pass, nor be converted into aliment. Arbuthnot.

TENANCY, n. f. [tenanche, old French; tenentia, law Latin, from tenant.] Temporary possession of what belongs to another.

This duke becomes seized of favour by descent, though the condition of that state be commonly no more than a tenancy at will. Watson.

TENANT, n. f. [tenant, French.],

1. One that holds of another; one that on certain conditions has temporary possession and use of that which is in reality the property of another: correlative to landlord.

I have been your tenant,
And your father's tenant, these fourscore years.

The English being only tenants at will of the natives for such convenience of fishing. Heylyn.
Such is the mould, that the black tenant seeds
On precious fruits, and pays his rent in weeds.

Jupiter had a farm long for want of a tenant.

His cheerful tenants bless their yearly toil,
Yet to their lord owe more than to the soil. Pope.
The tenants of a manor fall into the sentiments of their lord.

The father is a tyrant over slaves and beggars,
whom he calls his tenants.

2. One who resides in any place.

O fields, O woods, oh when shall I be made
The happy tenant of your shade! Cowley.
The bear, rough tenant of these shades. Thomson.

TO TENANT, v. a. [from the noun.] To hold on certain conditions.

Sir Roger's estate is tenanted by persons who have served him or his ancestors.

TENANTABLE, adj. [from tenant.] Such as may be held by a tenant.

The runs that time, sickness, or melancholy, shall bring, must be made up at your cost; for that thing a husband is but tenant for life in what he holds, and is bound to leave the place tenantable
to the next that shall take it.

That the soul may not be too much accommodated in her house of clay, such necessaries are secured to the body as may keep it in tenantable repair.

TENANTLESS, adj. [from tenant.] Unoccupied; unpossessed.

O thou, that dost inhabit in my breast,
Leave not the mansion so long tenantless,
Lest growing ruin on the building fall,
Add leave no memory of what it was! Shakespeare.

TENANT-SAW, n. f. [corrupted, I suppose, from tenon-saw.] See TENON.

mon safety, and tending towards it in the directest course. Temple.

The laws of our religion tend to the universal happiness of mankind. Tillotson.

3. To contribute.

Many times that which we ask would, if it should be granted, be worse for us, and perhaps tend to our destruction; and then God, by denying the particular matter of our prayers, doth grant the general matter of them. Hammond.

4. [from attend.] To wait; to expect.
Out of use.

The bark is ready, and the wind at help;
Th' associates tend. Shakespeare.

5. To attend; to wait as dependants or servants.

And touch'd by her fair tendance gladlier grew. Milton.

TENDENCE, } n. f. [from tend.]
TENDENCY, }

1. Direction of course toward any place or object.

It is not much business that distracts any man;
but the want of purity, continuity, and tendency towards God. Taylor.

Writings of this kind, if conducted with candour, have a more particular tendency to the good of their country, than any other compositions.

We may acquit ourselves with the powers and properties, the tendency and inclinations, of body and spirit. Watts.

All of them are innocent, and most of them had a moral tendency, to bathe the violence of passions, or laugh out of countenance some vice or folly.

2. Direction or course toward any inference or result, &c.

The greater congruity or incongruity there is in any thing to the reason of mankind, and the greater tendency it hath to promote or hinder the perfection of man's nature, so much greater degrees hath it of moral good or evil; to which we ought to proportion our inclination, or aversion.

These opinions are of so little moment, that, like notes in the sun, their tendencies are little noticed. Locke.

TENDER. adj. [tendre, French.]

1. Soft; easily impressed or injured; not firm; not hard.

The earth brought forth the tender grass. Milton.
From each tender stalk the gushers. Milton.

ism, even the tenor of the fifth movement, and of sovereignty founded only upon faintship. South.
They wou'd their master's book. Prior.

TENFOLD. adj. [ten and fold.] Ten times increased.

Five knuded into tenfold rage. Milton.

TENNIS. n. f. [This play is supposed by Stimmer to be named from the word
tenet, take it, hold it, or there it goes, used by the French when they drive the ball.] A play at which a ball is driven with a racket.

The barber's man hath been seen with him, and the old ornament of his cheek hath already stuffed tennis balls. Shakspeare.

A prince, by a hard destiny, became a tennis ball long to the blind goddess. Howell.
It can be no more disgrace to a great lord to draw a picture, than to play at tennis with his page.

The inside of the urea is blacked like the walls of a tennis court, that the rays falling upon the retina may not, by being rebounded thence upon the urea, be returned again; for such a repercussion would make the sight more confused. More against Atheism.

We conceive not a tennis ball to think, consequently not to have any volition, or preference of motion to rest. Locke.

We have no exedra for the philosophers adjoining to our tennis court, but there are alchouses.
Arbutnot and Pope.

TO TENNIS. v. a. [from the noun.] To drive as a ball. Not used.

Those four garrulous illing forth upon the enemy, will drive him from one side to another, and tennis him amongst them, that he shall find no where safe to keep his feet in, or hide himself. Spenser.

TENON. n. f. [Fr.] The end of a timber cut to be fitted into another timber.

Such variety of parts, solid with hollow; some with cavities as mortises to receive, others with tenons to fit them. Ray.

The tenon-jaw being thin, hath a back to keep it from bending. Mevion.

TENOUR. n. f. [tenor, Lat. tencur, Fr.]

1. Continuity of state; constant mode; manner of continuity; general currency.

We might perceive his words interrupted continually with sighs, and the tenor of his speech not lost together to one constant end, but dissolved in itself, as the vehemency of the inward passion prevailed. Sidney.

When the world first out of chaos sprang,
So found the days, and so the tenor ran
Of their felicity: a spring was there,
An everlasting spring the jolly year
Led round in his great circle; no winds breath
As now did snell of winter or of death. Cragshaw.

Still I see the tenor of man's woe
Hold on the same, from woman to begin. Milton.
Does not the whole tenor of the divine law politely require humnity and meekness to all men? Spratt.

Inspire my numbers,
Till I my long laborious work complete,
And add perpetual tenor to my rhimes,
Dedue'd from nature's birth to Cæsar's times. Dryden.

This success would look like chance, if it were not perpetual, and always of the same tenor. Dryden.

Cair it be poison! poison 's of one tenor,
Or hot, or cold. Dryden.

There is to great an uniformity amongst them,
that the whole tenor of those bodies thus preserved,
clearly points forth the month of May Woodward.

In such lays as neither ebb nor flow,
Correctly cold, and regularly low,
That, humming faults, one quiet tenor keep,
We cannot blame indeed—but we may sleep. Pope.

2. Sense contained; general course or drift.

Has not the divine Apollo said,
It's not the tenor of his oracle,
That king Leontes shall not have an heir,
Till his lost child be found? Shakspeare.

TEN

By the stern brow and waspish action,
Which he did use as he was writing of it,
It bears an angry tenor. Shakspeare.

Did no tear the bond.

—When it is paid according to the tenor. Shakspeare.
Reading it must be repeated again and again, with a close attention to the tenor of the discourse, and a perfect neglect of the divisions into chapters and verses. Locke.

3. A found in music.

The treble cutteth the air too sharp to make the found equal; and therefore a tenor or tenor is the sweetest part. Bacon.

Water and air he for the tenor chose,
Earth made the base, the treble flame arose. Cowley.

TENSE. adj. [tenus, Latin.] Stretched; stiff; not lax.

For the free passage of the found into the ear, it is requisite that the tympanum be tense, and hard stretched, otherwise the laxnets of the membrans will certainly dead and damp the found. Holder.

TENSE. n. f. [tempus, Fr. tempus, Lat.] In grammar, tense, in strict speaking, is only a variation of the verb to signify time. Clarke.

As foresight, when it is natural, answers to memory, to when methodical it answers to remittence, and may be called forecast, all of them expressed in the tense given to verbs. Memory faith, I did see, reminiscence, I had seen; foresight, I shall see, forecast, I shall have seen. Grew.

Ladies, without knowing what tenses and particles are, speak as properly and as correctly as gentlemen. Locke.

He should have the Latin words given him in their first case and tense, and should never be left to look them himself from a dictionary. Watts.

TENSENESS. n. f. [from tense.] Contraction; tension: the contrary to laxity.

Should the pain and *tense*ness of the part continue, the operation must take place. Sharp.

metals.

2. Trial; examination: as by the cupel.

All thy vexations
Were but my trials of thy love, and thou Hast strangely stood the test. Shakespeare.

Let there be some more test made of my metal,
Before so noble and so great a figure
Be stamp'd upon it. Shakespeare.

They who thought worst of the Scots, did not think there would be no fruit or discovery from that test. Clarendon.

What use of oaths, of promise, or of test,
Where men regard no God but interest? Waller.

Thy virtue, pounce, has stood the test of fortune
Like purest gold, that, tortur'd in the furnace, Comes out more bright, and brings forth all its weight. Addison.

3. Means of trial.

Whom should my muse then fly to, but the best
Of kings for grace; of poets, for my test? Ben Jonson.

To be read herself the need not fear;

Each test, and every light, her muse will bear. Dryden.

Your noble race

We banish not, but they forsake the place:
Our doors are open: True; but, ere they come,
You toil your censur'd test, and tune the room. Dryden.

4. That with which any thing is compared in order to prove its genuineness.

Unerring Nature, still divinely bright,
One clear, unchang'd, and univereal light,
Lafe, force, and beauty, must to all impart,
At once the source, and end, and test of art. Pope.

5. Discriminative characteristic.

Our penal laws no sons of yours admit,
Our test excludes your tribe from benefit. Dryden.

shells.

2. Having continuous, not jointed shells:
opposed to crustaceous.

Testaceous, with naturalists, is a term given only to such fish whose long and thick shells are entire, and of a piece; because those which are jointed, as the lobsters, are crustaceous: but in medicine, all preparations of shells, and substances of the like kind, are thus called. Quincy.

Several shells were found upon the shores, of the testaceous and testaceous kind. Woodward.

The mineral particles in these shells are plainly to be distinguished from the testaceous ones, or the texture and substance of the shell. Woodward.

TESTAMENT. n. f. [testament, Fr. testa- mentum, Lat.]

1. A will; any writing directing the disposal of the possessions of a man deceased.
He bringeth arguments from the love which always the testator bore him, imagining that these, or the like proofs, will convict a testament to have that in it which other men can do where by read-

All the temporal lands, which men devout
By testament have given to the church,
Would they strip from us. Shakespeare.

He ordained by his last testament, that his Aeneids should be burnt. Dryden.

to the groins and testicles. Wye.

TESTIFICATION. n. f. [testificatio, Lat.
from testify.] The act of witnessing.

When together we have all received those heavenly mysteries wherein Christ imparteth himself unto us, and giveth visible testification of our blessed communion with him, we should, in hatred of all heresies, factions, and schisms, declare openly ourselves united. Hooker.

In places solemnly dedicated for that purpose, is a more direct service and testification of our homage to God. South.

TESTIFICATOR. n. f. [from testify,
Lat.] One who witnesses.

TESTIFIER. n. f. [from testify.] One who testifies.

testimonium, Lat.] A writing produced by any one as an evidence for himself.

Hospitable people entertain all the idle vagrant reports, and send them out with passports and testi- monials, and will have them pass for legitimate. Government of the Tongue.

It is possible to have such testimonials of divine authority as may be sufficient to convince the more reasonable part of mankind, and pray what's wanting in the testimonials of Jesus Christ? Burnet.

A clerk does not exhibit to the bishop letters
nisiive or testimonial, testifying his good behaviour. Aylmer.

TESTIMONY. n. f. [testimonium, Lat.]

1. Evidence given; proof by witnesses.

The proof of every thing must be by the testimony of such as the parties produce. Spencer.

If I bring you sufficient testimony, may I not then say I have more. Shakespeare.

Evidence is said to arise from testimony, when we depend upon the credit and relation of others to the truth or falsehood of any thing. Hobbes.

I could not answer it to the world, if I gave not your lordship my testimony of being the best but band. Dryden.

I must bear this testimony to Otway's memory, that the passions are truly touched in his Verse Preserved. Dryden.

2. Publick evidences.

We maintain the uniform testimony and tradition of the primitive church. Hobbes.

By his precept a sanctuary is granted,
An ark; and in the ark his testimony; Mason.

Theſe ſacred hymns chriſtianity hath peculiar to itſelf, the other being ſongs too of praife and thankſgiving, wherewith as we ſerve God, ſo the Jews likewiſe.

Of old there were ſongs of praife and thankſgiving unto God.

We ſhould acknowledge our obligations to God for the many favours we receive, by continual praifes and thankſgiving.

The common practice of all chriſtian churches and ſtates, in appointing and keeping days of public thankſgiving and humiliation, is argument ſufficient to prove, that in the common ſenſe of chriſtians it is not forbidden in ſcripture.

THANKWORTHY. adj. [thank and worthy.] Deſerving gratitude; meritorious.

This is thankful, if a man endure grief.
If love be compell'd, and cannot chuſe,
How can it grateful or thankful prove?

THARM. n. f. [Tharm, Sax. darm, Dut. the gut.] Intestines twisted for ſeveral uſes.

THAT. pronoun. [that, Gothick; Thæt, Sax. dat, Dutch.]

1. Not this, but the other.
He wins me, that means I told you.

Octavia, not only that,
That were exorable, that and thouſands more
Of ſemblable import, but he hath wag'd
New wars againſt me.

2. Which; relating to an antecedent thing.

The inner makes an aberration from the ſcope or mark that is ſet before him.

Nothing they but duſt can ſhow,
Or bones that haſten to be fo.

When there is no ſuch evident certainty as to take away all kind of doubting, in ſuch caſes, a judgment that is equal and impartial muſt incline to the greater probability.

3. Who; relating to an antecedent perſon.
Saints that taught and led the way to heaven.

4. It ſometimes ſerves to ſave the repetition of a word or words foregoing.
I'll know your buſineſs, that I will.

They ſaid, What is that to us? ſee thou to that.

Ye deſand, and that your brethren.

Yet for all that, when they be in the land of their enemies I will not caſt them away.

We muſt direct our prayers to right ends; and that either in reſpect of the prayer itſelf, or the things we pray for.

They weep, as if they meant
That way at leaſt proud Nabus to prevent.

This ſunick ſubject will occur upon that of poetry.

What is inviting in this ſort of poetry, proceeds not ſo much from the idea of a country life itſelf, as from that of its tranquillity.

5. Oppoſed to this, as the other to one.
This is not fair; nor profitable that;
Nor t' other queſtion proper for debate.

6. When this and that relate to foregoing words, this is referred like hic or cecy to the latter, and that like ille or cetera to the former.

In this ſcale gold, in t' other ſame does lie,
The weight of that mounts this too high.

7. Such as.
It's religion is meant a living up to thoſe principles, that is, to act conformably to our beſt reaſon, and to live as becomes thoſe who believe a God and a future ſtate.

8. That which; what.
Sir, I think the meat wants that I have.

9. The thing.

The ſcarſe hath vow'd, beſides that that has hand ſubject.

He made that art which was a rage.

10. The thing which then was.
Secure proud Nabus ſlept,
And dreamt, vain man, of that day's barbarous ſport.

11. By way of eminence.
This is that Jonathan, the joy and grace,
That Jonathan, in whom does that remain
All that fond mothers wiſh.

Hence love himſelf, that tyrant of my days

12. In THAT. Because; in conſequence of.
Things are preached not in that they are taught, but in that they are publiſhed.

THAT. conjunction.
1. Because.
It is not that I love you leſs
Than when before your feet I lay;
But to prevent the ſad increaſe
Of hopeleſs love, I keep away.

Forgive me that I thus your patience wrong.

2. Noting a conſequence.
That he ſhould dare to do me this diſgrace!
Is fool or coward writ upon my face?

The cuſtom and familiarity of theſe tongues do ſometimes to ſat influence the expreſſions in theſe epistles, that one may obſerve the force of the Hebrew conjugations.

3. Noting indication.
We answered, that we held it ſo agreeable, as we both forgot dangers paſt, and fears to come, that we thought an hour ſpent with him was worth years of our former life.

In the midſt of this darkneſs they ſaw ſo much light, as to believe that when they died they would immediately to the ſtars.

I have ſhew'd before, that a mere poſſibility to the contrary can by no means hinder a thing from being highly credible.

4. Noting a final end.
Treat it kindly, that it may Wiſh at leaſt with us to ſtay.

THATCH. n. f. [Thace, Sax. Thaw, Skinner, from Thac, a roof; in Iſlandick, that, Mr. Lye.] Straw laid upon the top of a houſe to keep out the weather.

Hard by a ſte, beneath a roof of thatch
Dwelt Obloquy, who in her early days
Baskets of fiſh at Billingtongate did watch,
Cod, whiting, oſſier, mackerel, ſprat, or plaice.

A plough-boy, who has never ſeen any thing but thatched houſes, naturally imagines that thatch belongs to the very nature of a houſe.

Then came roſy health from her cottage of thatch,
Where never phyſician had liſted the latch.

To THATCH. v. a. [Thaccian, Saxon.] To cover as with ſtraw.

Make falſe hair, and thatch
Your poor thin roofs with burthen of the dead.

Moſs groweth chiefly upon ridges of houſes tiled or thatched.

Then Rome was poor, and there you might behold
The palace thatch'd with ſtraw.

Sonnets or elegies to Chloë
Might riſe a houſe above two ſtories:
A lyric ode would ſtate, a catch
Would tile, an epigram would thatch.

THATCHER. n. f. [from thatch.] One whoſe trade is to cover houſes with ſtraw.

You merit new employments daily;
Our thatcher, diſcher, gard'ner, bailly,
A ſh is univerſal timber; it ſerves the ſoldier ſeaman, carpenter, thatcher, and huſbandman.

To THAW. v. n. [Thapan, Saxon; degen Dutch.]

1. To grow liquid after congelation; to melt.

When thy melted maid
His lover at thy pillow hath laid;
If thou begin'st to show for him,
May my name stop in.
It on firm land
Flaws not, but gathers heap, and ruin seems
On ancient pile; all else deep snow and ion.

Having let that ice thaw of itself, and frozen the liquor a second time, we could not discern any thing.

O Solitude! romantick maid,
Whether by nodding tow'rs you tread,
Or climb the Andes' cliffed side,
Or by the Nile's coy source abide,
Or, starting from a half year's sleep,
From Hecla view the thawing deep,
Or Tadmor's marble wastes survey,
Or in yon roofless cloister play;
There, fond nymph! again I woo,
And again thy steps pursue.

To remit the cold which had caused troit.

To THAW. v. a. To melt what was con-gealed.

Bring me the fairest creature northward born,
Where Phœbus' fire scarce thaws the icicles.

Think not that Cæsar bears such rebel blood,
That will be thaw'd from the true quality
With what which melteth fools.

My love is thaw'd,
Which, like a waxen image 'gainst a foe,
Bears no impression of the thing it was.

She can unlock
The clasping charin, and thaw the numbing spell.

Burnish'd steel, that cast a glare
From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air.

Her icy heart is thaw'd.

THAW. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Liquefaction of any thing congealed.

A man of my kidney, that seems subject to heat
as better; a man of continual dissolution and thaw.

Harden his stubborn heart, but still as ice
More harden'd after thaw.

2. Warmth such as quiesces congelation.

I was the prince's foster, and duller than a great thaw.

That cold country where discourse doth freeze in the air all winter, and may be heard in the next summer, or at a great thaw.

When sharp frosts had long constrain'd the earth,
A kindly thaw unlocks it with cold rain,
And the tender blade peeps.

THE. article. [de, Dutch.]

1. The article noting a particular thing.

Your son has paid a soldier's debt:
He only liv'd but till he was a man;
The which no fooster had his prowess confirm'd,
In the upspringing station where he fought,
But like a man he dy'd.

He put him in mind of the long pretence he had to be groom of the bed-chamber, for the which he could not chuse but say, that he had the queen's promise.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Unhappy till the last, the kind releasing knell.

I'll watch the muses, Hannibal.
The fair example of the heav'nly lark,
Thy fellow poet, Cowley, mark;
Above the stars let thy bold music sound,
Thy humble nest build on the ground.

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world.

Night shades the groves, and all in silence lie,
All but the mournful Philomel and I.

2. Before a vowel e is commonly cut off in verse.

Who had th' especial engines been to rear
His fortunes up into the gates they were.

TH' adorning thee with so much art
Is but a barb'rous skill:
'Tis like the poisoning of a dart,
Too apt before to kill.

3. Sometimes he is cut off.

In this scale gold, in t' other same does lie.

4. It is used by way of consequential reference.

Lions into civil streets, and citizens into their dens.

For the Italians, Dante had begun to file their language in verse before Boccaccio, who likewise received no little help from his waiter Petrusch; but the reformation of their prose was wholly owing to Boccaccio.

2. Theirs is used when any thing comes in construction between the possessive and substantive.

Prayer we always have in our power to bestow,
and they never in theirs to refuse.

They gave the same names to their own idols:
which the Egyptians did to theirs.

The penalty to thy transgression due,
And due to theirs, which out of thine will grow.

Nothing but the name of real appears
'Tis but our best actions and the work of theirs.

Yain are our neighbours hopes, and vain their curses.

The fault is more their language's than theirs.

Which established law of theirs seems too strict at first, because it excludes all secret intrigues.

And, reading, with like theirs out fate and fame

Of the imperial theme.

When a soldier was the theme, my name
Was not far off.

O! could I flow like thee, and make thy stream
My great example, as it is my theme:
Though deep, yet clear; though gentle, yet not dull;

Strong without rage, without o'erflowing fall.

Whatever near Eurota's happy stream,
With laurels crown'd, had been Apollo's theme.

Though I der's streams immortal Rome behold,
Though foaming Herminus swells with tides of gold;
From heav'n's still though seven-fold Nilus flows,
And harvests on a hundred realins below;
Thine now no more shall be the muse's theme,
Lamenting none, as in the ten their stream.

From westward when the show'ry clouds arise,
Or parting billows pouring on the main,
When Jupiter descends in barbed rain. Addison.

THICKET. n. f. [Wicceat. Saxon.] A close knot or tuft of trees; a close wood or copse.

I drew you hither,
Into the chiefest thicket of the park. Shakespeare.
Within a thicket I repos'd; and found
Let fall from heav'n a sleep interminate. Chapman.
Thus, or any of his, could not in halts creep through those desert regions, which the length of one hundred and thirty years after the flood had fortified with thickets, and permitted every bush and briar, reed and tree, to join themselves into one main body and forest. Raleigh

How often, from the sleep
Of echoing hill, or thicket, have we heard
Celestial voices, to the midnight air,
Sole, or responsive, each to other's note,
Singing their great Creator! Milton.
My brothers slept to the next thicket side
To bring me berries. Milton.

Now Leda's twins
Their trembling lances brandish'd at the foe;
Nor had they mist'd, but he to thickets fled Conceal'd from aiming spears, not pensive to the sight. Dryden.

I've known young Juba rise before the sun,
To beat the thicket where the tiger slept,
Or seek the lion in his dreadful haunts. Addison.

THICKLY. adv. [from thick.]

shades drew into them all the birds of the country. Addison.

6. Want of sharpness; want of quickness.

A person found in himself, being at some times subject to a thickness of hearing, the like effect.

What you write is printed in large letters, otherwise, between the weakness of my eyes and thickness of hearing, I should lose the greatest pleasure. Swift.

THICK-SKULLED. adj. Dull; stupid.

They're pleas'd to hear their thick-skull'd judges cry,
Well mov'd! oh finely said! Dryden.

This downright fighting tool, this thick-skull'd hero,

This blunt unthinking instrument of death,
Whose plain dull virtue has outgone my wit. Dryden.

THICKSET. adj. [thick and set.] Close planted.

His eye-balls glare with fire, suffus'd with blood,
His neck shows up a thickset thorny wood;
His brawled back a trench unpal'd appears,
And hands erected like a field of spurs. Dryden.

The world is so thick with the numerous productions of the creatures, that besides the apparent beauty of things viewed by all, there are those secret graces in every part of nature, which some few alone have the skill to discern. Green.

THICKSKIN. n. f. [thick and skin.] A coarse gross man; a numskull.

The shallow'st thickskin of that barren sort,
Who Pyramus presented in their sport,
Forsook his scene, and enter'd in a brake. Shakespeare.

THIEF. n. f. [thiefs, Gothick; Deif, Saxon; dief, Dutch.] It was anciently written thief, and so appears to have been of two syllables: thie was wont to be taken for thrift; so that thief is he that takes of or from a man his thie, that is, his thrift or means whereby he thrives.]

1. One who takes what belongs to another:
the thief steals by secrecy, and the robber
by violence; but these senses are confounded.

Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot
by night. Shakespeare.

This he said because he was a thief, and hid the bag. John.

Can you think I owe a thief my life,
Because he took it not by lawless force?
Am I oblig'd by that villain's rapines,
And to maintain his murders. Dryden.

2. An excrescence in the stuff of a candle.

Their burning lamps the storm ensuing blow,
Th' oil sparkles, thiees about the snuff do grow. May.

lead, take.] One

THIEF-TAKER. whose business is to detect thieves, and bring them to justice.

A wolf passed by as the thief-leaders were dragging a fox to execution. L'Estrange.

My ev'nings all I would with sharpers spend,
And make the thief-catcher my bosom friend. Brampton.

TO THIEVE. v. n. [from thief.] To steal;
to practise theft.

THIEVERY. n. f. [from thieve.]
1. The practice of stealing; theft.

Ne how to scape great punishment and shame,
For their late treason and vile thievery. Speight.

Do villainy, do, since you profess to do't,
Like workmen; I'll example you with thievery. Shakespeare.

He makes it a help unto thievery, for thieves having a design upon a house, make a fire at the four corners thereof, and cast therein the fragments of limestone, which smelteth smoke. Brown.

Amongst the Spartans, thievery was a practice morally good and honest. South.

2. That which is stolen.

Injurious time now, with a robber's haste,
Claims his rich thievery up he knows not how. Shakespeare.

THIEVISH. adj. [from thief.]

1. Given to stealing; practising theft.

What, wouldst thou have me go and beg my food,
Or with a bale and bodiless sword entice
A thievish living on the common road? Shakespeare.

O thievish night,
Why shouldst thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the flares,
That urine hangs in heav'n, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the mistle and lonely traveller? Milton.

The thievish God suspected him, and took
The kind aside, and thus in whisper spoke:
Discover not the theft. Addison.

2. Secret; sly; acting by stealth.

Four and twenty times the pilot's class
Hath told the thievish minutes how they pass. Shakespeare.

THIEVISHLY. adv. [from thievish.]

Disposition to steal; habit of stealing.

THIGH. n. f. [Thiep, Saxon; thico, Islandick; die, Dutch.]

The thigh includes all between the buttocks and the knee. The thigh bone is the longest of all the bones in the body: its fibres are close and hard: it has a cavity in its middle; it is a little convex and round on its fore-side, but a little hollow, with a long and small ridge on its back-side. Quincy.

He touched the hollow of his thigh, and it was out of joint. Georgius.

The flesh dissolv'd, and left the thigh bone bare. Wylmer.

THICK. pronoun. [Thic, Saxon.] That same. Obsolete.

I love thick last: alas, why do I love?
She deigns not my good will, but doth reprove.
And of my rural musick holdeth scorn. Spenser.

THILL. n. f. [Thille, Saxon, a piece of timber cut.] The shafts of a waggon;

the arms of wood between which the last horse is placed.

More easily a waggon may be drawn in rough ways, if the fore wheels were as high as the hinder wheels, and if the thills were fixed under the axis. Motimer.

THILL-HORSE. n. f. [thill and horse.]

THILLER. The thill horse; the horse that goes between the shafts.

Whole bridle and saddle, whither and nail,
With collars and harness for thiller and all. Taffer.

What a beard hast thou got! thou hast got more hair on thy chin, than Dolbin my thill horse has on his tail. Shakespeare.

THUMB. n. f. [This is supposed by Mythow to be corrupted from thumb
bell.] A metal cover by which women secure their fingers from the needle when they sew.

Your ladies and pale visag'd maids,
Like Amarais, come tripping after drums;
Their thumbes into armed gauds change,
Their needles to lances. Shakespeare.

Examine Venus and the Moon,
Who stole a thumb at a spoon. Hudibras.

Venus that run perpendicular to the horizon, have valves sucking to their sides like to many thumbes, which, when the blood presses back, stop the passage, but are compressed by the forward motion of the blood. Chapman.

THUMB. n. f. [thymus, Latin; thym, Fr.]

A fragrant herb from which the bees are supposed to draw honey. This should be written thyme.

Fair margerds, and bees during thyme. Spenser.

Islandick; dunn, Dutch.]

1. Not thick.

Beat gold into thin plates, and cut it into wires. Fabius.

2. Rare; not dense.

The hope of the ingodly is like thin froth, that is blown away with the wind. Wylmer.

In the day when the air is more thin, the sound perceiveth better; but when the air is more thick, as in the night, the sound spendeth and the dream abroad it is. Bacon.

Understand the same

Of thin within them, water's in a lease,
Not hither immov'd, since they cannot change
Their element, to draw the thinner air. Milton.

The waters of Babilonia are so thin and so hot, that they swim upon the top of the stream of the river Hyamus. Mor.

To warn new walk pour any alkali, the liquor will remain at rest, though it appear somewhat thinner. Arbutnot.

3. Not close; separate by large spaces.

He pleas'd of the town and built his audience
On air, well not using long discourse. Spenser.

They art weak, and full of art is he;
How could he that host seduce to sin,
Whom fall has left the heavenly nation clear?
Dryden.

Northward, beyond the mountains we will go,
Where rocks he cover'd with eternal snow,
Thin herbage in the plains, and fruitless fields;
The sand no gold, the mine no silver yields.
Thin on the towers they stand; and even those few,
A feeble, fainting, and dejected crew.
Dryden.

Alas! my dear
Has ravag'd more than half the globe; and sees Mankind grown thin by his destructive sword.
Sick with the loss of fame, what throngs pour in,
Unpeople courts, and leave the senate thin!
Young.

4. Not closely compacted or accumulated.
Seven thin ears blushed with the east wind blowing up.
Geoffrey.

5. Exile; small.

I hear the groans of ghosts;
Thin, hollow sounds, and lamentable screams.
Dryden.

6. Not coarse; not gross in substance; as,
a thin veil.

7. Not abounding.

Ferrara is very large, but extremely thin of people.
Addison.

8. Not fat; not bulky; lean; slim; slender.
A thin, thin gutted fox made a hard shift to wriggle his body into a hen-roost; and when he had stuffed his guts well, the hole was too little to get out again.
L'Estrange.

THIN. adv. Not thickly.

Spain is thin sown of people, by reason of the sterility of the soil, and the natives being exhausted in such vast territories as they possess.
Bacon.

Remove the swelling epithets, thick laid
As varnish on a lark's cheek; the rest
Thin sown with ought of profit or delight.
Milton.

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise,
That last infinity of noble mind,
To scorn delights, and love laborious days;
But the fair gerdon when we hope to find,
And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind fury with the abhorred sheers,
And fits the thin-skin life.
Milton.

Thin-leaved arbutus hails grass receives,
And places huge apples bear, that bore but leaves.
Dryden.

A country gentlewoman, if it be like to rain, goes not abroad thin clad.
Locke.

To THIN. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make thin or rare; to make less thick.

The serum of the blood is neither acid nor alkaline: oil of vitriol thickens, and oil of tartar thins it a little.
Arbutnot.

2. To make less close or numerous.

The bill against rent and branch, never passed, till both houses were sufficiently thinned and overruled.
King Charles.

To unload the branches, or the leaves to thin,
That suck the vital moisture of the vine.
The Caesar's sword has made Rome's senate little,
And thinned its ranks.
Addison.

3. To attenuate.

The vapours, by the solar heat
Thinned and exhal'd, rise to their airy seat.
Blackm.

THIN. pronoun. [thin, Gothick; thin, Saxon; dijn, Dutch.] Belonging or relating to thee; the pronoun possessive of thou. It is used for thy when the substantive is divided from it; as, this is thy house; thine is this house; this house is thine.

Thou hast her, France; let her be thine, for we Have no such daughter.
Shakespeare.

THING. n. s. [Sing. Sax. ding, Dut.]

1. Whatever is; not a person. A general word.

Do not you chide; I have a thing for you.

—You have a thing for me!

It is a common thing—

—Ha!

—To have a foolish wife.

Shakespeare.

The great master he found busy in packing up his things against his departure.

The remnant of the most offering is a thing most holy.
Leviticus.

Says the master, You devour the same things that they would have eaten, mice and all. L'Estrange.

When a thing is capable of good proof in any kind, men ought to rest satisfied in the best evidence for it which that kind of things will bear, and beyond which better would not be expected, supposing it were true.
Wilkins.

I should blush to own so rude a thing.
As 'tis to shun the brother of my king.
Dryden.

Wicked men, who understand any thing of wildom, may see the imprudence of worldly and irreligious courses.
Tillotson.

Princes, when they come to know the true state of things, are not unwilling to prevent their own ruin.
Davenant.

2. It is used in contempt.

I have a thing in prose, began above twenty-eight years ago, and almost finished: it will make a four shilling volume.
Swift.

3. It is used of persons in contempt, or sometimes with pity.

See, sons, what things you are! how quickly nature

Falls to revolt, when gold becomes her object!
For thus the foolish over-careful fathers
Have broke their sleeps with thought, their brains with care.
Shakespeare.

A thing by neither man or woman priz'd,
And scarcely known enough to be despis'd.
Never any thing was so unbr'd as that odious man.
Dryden.

The poor thing sigh'd, and, with a blessing expressed with the utmost vehemence, turned from me.
Addison.

I'll be this abject thing no more,
Love, give me back my heart again.
Granville.

4. It is used by Shakespeare once in a sense of honour.

I lov'd the maid I married; never man
Sigh'd truer breath: but that I fee thee here,
Thou noble thing! more dances my wrapt heart.
Shakespeare.

To THINK. v. n. pres. thought. [thank-gun, Gothick; þencean, Saxon; dencken,
Dutch.]

1. To have ideas; to compare terms or things; to reason; to cogitate; to perform any mental operation, whether of apprehension, judgment, or illation.

Thinking, in the propriety of the English tongue, signifies that sort of operation of the mind about its ideas, wherein the mind is active, where it, with some degree of voluntary attention, considers any thing.
Locke.

What am I? or from whence? for that I am
I know, because I think; but whence I came,
Or how this frame of mine began to be,
What other being can disclose to me?
Dryden.

Those who perceive dully, or retain ideas in their minds ill, will have little matter to think on.
Locke.

It is an opinion, that the soul always thinks, and that it has the actual perception of ideas in itself constantly, and that actual thinking is as inseparable from the soul, as actual extension is from the body.
Locke.

These are not matters to be slightly and superficially thought upon.
Tillotson.

His experience of a good prince must give great satisfaction to every thinking man.
Addison.

2. To judge; to conclude; to determine.

Let them marry to whom they think best, only to their father's tribe shall they marry.
Numbers.

I fear we shall not find
This long desired king such as was thought.
Can it be thought that I have kept the gospel terms of salvation, without ever so much as intending, in any serious and deliberate manner, either to know them, or keep them.
Law.

3. To intend.

Thou thought'st to help me, and such thanks I give.
As one near death to those that wish him live.
Shakespeare.

4. To imagine; to fancy.

Something since his coming forth is thought of,
which

Imports the kingdom so much fear and danger,
That his return was not requir'd.
Edmund, I think, is gone.
Shakespeare.

In pity of his misery, to dispatch
His nighted life.
Shakespeare.

We may not be startled at the breaking of the exterior earth; for the face of nature hath provided men to think of and observe such a thing.
Harmer.

Those who love to live in gardens, have never thought of contriving a winter garden.
Spectator.

5. To muse; to meditate.

You pine, you languish, love to be alone,
Think much, speak little, and in speaking sigh.
Dryden.

6. To recollect; to observe.

We are come to have the warrant.
—Well thought upon; I have it here about me.
Shakespeare.

Think upon me, my God, for good, according to all that I have done.
Nehemiah.

7. To judge; to be of opinion.

If your general acquaintance be among ladies, provided they have no ill reputation, you think you are safe.
Swift.

8. To consider; to doubt; to deliberate.

Any one may think with himself, how then can any thing live in Mercury and Saturn?
Bentley.

9. To THINK on. To contrive; to light upon by meditation.

Still the work was not complete,
When Venus thought on a decent.
Swift.

10. To THINK of. To estimate.

The opinions of others whom we know and think well of are no ground of dissent.
Locke.

To THINK. v. a.

1. To imagine; to image in the mind; to conceive.

Charity thinketh no evil. 1 Corinthians.
Nor think superfluous others aid. Milton.
Think nought a trifle, though it small appears
young.

2. To believe; to esteem.

Nor think superfluous others aid. Milton.

3. To THINK much. To grudge.

He thought not much to clothe his enemies.
Milton.

If we consider our infinite obligations to God, we have no reason to think much to sacrifice to him our dearest interests in this world.
Tillotson.

4. To THINK scorn. To disdain.

He thought scorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone.
Ezra.

{ Me THINKETH. It seems to me. }

5. { Me THOUGHT. It appeared to me. }

These are unanomalous phrases of long continuance and great authority, but not easily reconciled to grammar. In me

thinketh, the verb being of the third person, seems to be referred not to the thing, and is therefore either active, as signifying to cause to think; or has the sense of seems, methinks it seems to me.

Me thought I saw the grave where Laura lay.
Southey.

Me thinketh the running of the forenoon is like that of Ahmaaz.
2 Samuel.

THINKER. n. s. [from think.] One who thinks in a certain manner.

No body is made any thing by hearing of rules, or laying them up in his memory; practice must settle the habit: you may as well hope to make a good musician by a lecture on the art of music, as a coherent thinker, or strict reasoner, by a set of rules.
Locke.

If a man had an ill-favoured nose, deep thought would impute the cause to the prejudice of his education.
Swift.

THINKING. n. s. [from think.] Imagination; cogitation; judgment.

He put it by once; but, in my thinking, he would fain have had it.
Shakespeare.

Rie grafs will kill thistles. Martimer.
THISTLE, golden, n. f. A plant. Miller.
THISTLY, adj. [from thistle.] Overgrown with thistles.

Wide o'er the thistly lawn as well's the breeze,
 A whitening flower of vegetable down Ambling floats. Thomson.

THITHER, adv. [ðiðer, Sax.]

1. To that place; opposed to hither.
 We're coming thither. Shakespeare

The gods, when they descended, hither
 From heav'n did always chide their way;
 And therefore so my boldly say,
 That 'twix the wax tooth thither. Cowley

When, like a badger from the cleft, the sun
 Sets tooth, he thither, whence he came, doth run
Deham.

These Phoenix and Ulysses watch the prey,
 And thither all the wealth of Troy convey. Dryden
 2. To that end; to that point.

THITHERTO, adv. [thither and to.] To that end; to far.

THITHERWARD, adv. [thither and a rel.] Toward that place.

Ne would he thither to pounce thitherward Approach, altho his drowsy den were next. Spenser.
 Madam, he's come to live the duke of Florence;
 We met him thitherward, for thence we came. Shakespeare

By quick intuitive motion, up I sprung,
 As thitherward endowing. Milton

The foolish hearts went to the lion's den, leaving very goodly footsteps of their journey thitherward, but not the like of their return. Leibniz

A tuit of daffies on a flow'ry lay
 They lay, and thitherward they bent their way
Dryden

THOU, adv. [Donne, Saxon.]

1. Thou. Spenser.

2. Thou contracted for though.

To THOU, v. n. To wait awhile. Ainslie.

THONG, n. f. [ðrang, ðrang, Saxon.] A strap, or string of leather.

The Indian king
 Laid by the lance, and took him to the sling; Thrice whistled the thong about his head, and threw
 The heated lead ball melted as it flew. Dryden.

The ancient celts only consisted of to many large thongs about the hand, without any lead at the end. Addison

The smiths and armourers on patreys idle,
 And nails for lozen'd spears, and thongs for shields provide. Dryden

THORACK, adj. [from thorax, Latin.] Belonging to the breast.

The chyle grows grey in the thorack duct.
Arbutnot.

THORAL, adj. [from thorus, Latin.] Relating to the bed.

The punishment for adultery, according to the Roman law, was sometimes made by a thoral separation. Addison

THORN, n. f. [thaurus, Gothick; ðorn, Saxon; doorn, Dutch.]

1. A prickly tree of several kinds.
Thorns in thistles shall it bring forth. Genesis.
 The most upright is sharper than a thorn hedge.
Mical.

2. A prickly growing on the thorn bush.
 Flowers of all hue, and without thorn the rose.
Milton.

3. Any thing troublesome.
 The god of empire, all its thorns and cares
 Be only mine. Southern.

THORNAPEL, n. f. A plant. Martimer.

THORBACK, n. f. [raia clavata, Latin.] A sea fish.
 He is a back, when dried, takes of sal ammoniac. Arbutnot.

THORNBUT, n. f. [rhombus aculeatus, Lat.] A sort of sea fish, Antiphon; which he distinguishes from thorback. A bit of verbon.

THORNY, adj. [from thorn.]

1. Full of thorns; spiny; rough; prickly.
 Not winding ivy, nor the glorious bay;
 He wore, sweet head! a thorny diadem. Randolph.

The boat's eye-balls glare with fire,
 His neck shoots up a thorny wood;
 His bristled back a thorny shield appears. Dryden

The water in thorny did for virtue toil
 A thorny, or at best a thorny toil. Dryden.

They on the thorny top
 Of rugged hills the thorny bramble crop. Dryden.

2. Pricking; vexatious.
 No dislike against the person
 Of our good queen, but the thorny points
 Of my all-greivous have this toward. Shakespeare.

So it goes to, and perplex'd debate,
 And thorny one, and rank and tugging hate.
Young

3. Difficult; perplexing.
 By low muddy thorny and layd ways they are come thorough, by how many civil trials. Spenser.

THOROUGH, prep. [the word through extended into two syllable.]

1. By way of making passage or penetration.

2. By means of.
 Mark Antony will follow
Thorough the hazards of this untrod state,
 With all true faith. Shakespeare.

THOROUGH, adj. [The adjective is always written thorough, the preposition commonly through.]

1. Complete; full; perfect.
 The Irish horseboys, in the thorough reformation of that realm, should be cut off. Spenser.

He did not decline a thorough engagement till he had time to reform him, whom he resolved never more to trust. Clarendon.

A thorough translator must be a thorough poet.
Dryden.

A thorough practice of subjecting ourselves to the wants of others, would extinguish in us pride.
Suett.

How can I call a general disregard and a thorough neglect of all religious improvements, a traity of impiety, when it was as much in my power to have been exact, and careful, and diligent? Law.

2. Passing through.
 Let all three sides be a double house, without thorough lights on the sides. Bacon.

THOROUGHFARE, n. f. [thorough and fare.]

1. A passage through; a passage without any stop or let.

The Hyrcanian deserts are as thoroughfares now
 For princes to come view fair Pontus. Shakespeare.

His body is a passable thoroughfare, if it be not hurt
 it is a thoroughfare for steel, if it be not hurt.
Shakespeare.

The ingrateful person is a monster, which is all throat and belly, a kind of thoroughfare, or common shore for the good things of the world to pass into. South.

The courts are fill'd with a tumultuous din
 Of crowds, or, ifling to and fro, cut ring in.
 A thoroughfare of noise, where some decide Things never heard, in loose tangle with lies.
Dryden.

2. Power of passing.
 Hell, and this world, one realm, one continent
 Of easy thoroughfare. Milton.

THOROUGHLY, adv. [from thorough.] Completely; fully.

Look into this button is thoroughly. Shakespeare.
 We can never be grieved for their miseries who are thoroughly wicked, and have thereby justly called their calamities on themselves. Dryden.

One would think, that every member of the community who embraces with reverence the principles of either party, had thoroughly fitted and examined them. Addison.

They had forgotten their solemn vows as thor- oughly as they had never made them. Atterbury.

THOROUGHFARE, adj. [thorough and pace.] Perfect in what is undertaken;

complete; thoroughfare. Generally in a bad sense.

When it was proposed to repeal the test clause, the ablest of those who were reckoned the most staunch and thorough whigs fell off at the intimation of it. Saunder.

THOROUGHSPED, adj. [thorough and sped.]
 Finished in principles; thoroughsped, commonly, finished in all.

Our thoroughsped republic of whigs, which contains the bulk of all buyers, pretenders, and professors, are most highly useful to princes. Saunder.

THOROUGHSTITCH, adv. [thorough and a stitch.] Completely; fully. A bad word.

Perseverance alone can carry us thoroughstitch.
Thomson.

THORP, n. f. Thorp, thorp, thorp, thorp, thorp, are all from the Saxon, ðorp, which signifies a village. Cowley.

THOSE, pronoun.

1. The plural of that.
 Make all our trumpets speak, give them all voices
 Those clamorous harbingers of blood and death.
Shakespeare.

Sure there are poets which did never dream
 Upon themselves, nor did taste the fireman
 Of Helicon; we therefore may suppose
 Those made not poets, but the poets those. Dryden.

The fibres of this muscle act as those of others.
Cowley.

2. Those refers to the former, those to the latter noun.

Neither their sighs nor tears are true,
Thou idly blow, those idly fall,
 Nothing like to ours at all,
 But sighs and tears have sexes too. Cowley.

THOU, pronoun. [ðu, Saxon; du, Dutch,
 in the oblique cases singular thee, de, Saxon; in the plural ye, ge, Saxon; in the oblique cases plural you, ye, Saxon.]

You is now commonly used for the nominative plural.

1. The second pronoun personal.
 Is this a dagger which I see before me,
 The handle toward my hand? Come, let me clutch thee.

Have thee not, and yet I see thee still Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible
 To feeling as to sight? Shakespeare.

I am like to call thee to agnion,
 To spit on thee again, to spurn thee too.
 If thou wilt lend this money, lend it not
 As to thy friend. Shakespeare.

Thou, it there be a thou in this bad town,
 Who dares with angry Empolis to bow,
 Who at enormous villany turns pale,
 And it cry agnion it with a full-blown tank. Dryden.

2. It is used only in very familiar or very solemn language. When we speak to equals or superiors, we say you; but in solemn language, and in addresses of worship, we say thou.

[Familiar.]

[Solemn.]
 For thou in dreadful whine we have High on the broken wave.
 I know thou wert not slow to hear,
 Nor impotent to face. Addison.

To THOU, v. a. [from thou.] To treat with familiarity.

I must live with the licence of ink, if thou thou him some three, it shall not be small. Shakespeare.

THOUGH, conjunction. [ðeah, Sax. that, Gothick.]

1. Notwithstanding that; although.
 Not that I to affirm, though so it seem.
 The found of love makes your soft heart about
 And guard itself, though but a child made. Butler.

I can desire to perceive those things that God has prepared for those that love him, though they be

Statefmen purge vice with vice, and may corrode
The bad with bad, a spider with a toad.
For to ill thralls not them, but they tangle ill,
And make her do much good against her will.

Donne.

The author of nature is not thrall'd to the laws of nature.

Drummond.

THRAPPLE. n. f. The windpipe of any animal. They still retain it in the Scottish dialect; we say rather throatle.

To THRASH. v. a. [Saxon, Saxon;
drischen, Dutch.]

1. To beat corn to free it from the chaff.
This is written variously thrash or thrish, but thrish is agreeable to etymology.
First thrigh the corn, then after burn the it aw.

Shakespeare.

Give on the thrif I wheat to hide it.

Judges.

Here be oars for burnt sacrifice, and therefore instruments for wood.

Samuel.

In the sun your golden grain display,
And thrash it out, and winnow it by day.

Dryden.

This is to preserve the ends of the bones from an ineffectuality, which they being hard bodies would contract from a joint motion, such as that of running or thrashing.

Rap.

Out of your clover well dried in the sun, after the first thrashing, get what feed you can.

Mortimer.

2. To beat; to drub.

Thou brave valiant art thou art here but to thrash the jail, and thou art brought and held among those of any will like a barbarian slave.

Shakespeare.

To THRASH. v. n. To labour; to drudge.

Frater would be Meivus, thrash for thines like his, the scorn and scandal of the times,
Than that Philopoll fatally divine,
Which is incredible the second, should be mine.

Dryden.

THRASHER. n. f. [from thrash.] One who thrashes corn.

Our soldiers, like a lazy thrasher with a flail,
Fell gently down, as if they struck then travellers.

Shakespeare.

Not barely the plowman's pains, the reaper's and the thrasher's toil, and the baker's sweat, is to be counted into the list of we eat: the labour of those employed about the utensils must all be charged.

Locke.

THRASHINGFLOOR. n. f. An area on which corn is beaten.

In tain the lands the thrashing floor prepare,
And exercise them thals in empty air.

Dryden.

Delve of cement depth your thrashing floor.

With temper'd clay, then fill and facet o'er.

THRASONICAL. adj. [from Thrash, a boulder in old comedy.] Boastful;
bragging.

His haught is lofty, his discourse peremptory, his general behaviour vain, ridiculous, and thrasonical.

Shakespeare.

THRAVE. n. f. [Saxon, Saxon.]

1. A herd; a drove. Out of use.

2. The number of two dozen. I know not how derived.

Dutch.]

1. A small line; a small twist; the rad-ment of cloth.

Let not Bardolph's vital thread be cut
With edge of penny cord and vile reproach.

Shall.

Though the double thread of dyed silk looked on single form devoid of reds, yet when numbers of these threads are brought together, their colour becomes notorious.

Boyle.

Though need might never so,

He not receive a thread, but naked go.

He who sat at a table but with a sword hanging over his head by one single thread or hair, was hard enough to check his appetite.

South.

The art of pleading is the skill of cutting to a thread between flattery and all manners of flattery.

Johnson.

2. Any thing continued in a course; uniform tenor.

The eagerness and trembling of the fancy doth not always regularly follow the same even thread of discourse, but strikes upon some other thing that bath relation to it.

Burnet.

The gout being a disease of the nervous parts, makes it so hard to cure, diseases are so as they are more remote in the thread of the motion of the fluids.

Arbutnot.

To THREAD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To pass through with a thread.

The largest crooked needle, with a ligature of the size of that I have threaded it with, in taking up the spermatick vessels.

Sharp.

2. To pass through; to pierce through.

Thus out of scaldon threading dark eyed night

Shakespeare.

Being prest to the war,
Even when the maw of the fiend was touch'd,
They would not thread the gates.

Shakespeare.

THREADBARE. adj. [thread and bare.]

1. Deprived of the nap; wore to the naked threads.

Threadbare coat, and cobbled shoes he wore

Spenser.

The cloth means to dress the commonwealth, and set a new nap upon it. so he had need, for his threadbare.

Shakespeare.

Will any freedom here from you be borne,
Whole cloaths are threadbare, and whole cloaks are torn?

Dryden.

He walk'd the streets, and wore a threadbare cloak.

He did and supp'd at charge of other folk.

Swift.

A Thracian thread the porter's place maintain'd,
Sworn for to threadbare supplants, and with pride
His master's preference, nay, his name, deny'd.

Haste.

2. Worn out; trite.

A hungry lean thread villain,

A mere anatomy, a mountebank,

A threadbare juggler, and a fortune-teller.

Shall.

Many writers of moral discourses run into stale topics and threadbare quotations, not handling their subject fully and closely.

Swift.

It is invidious to trade, he would not have mentioned this threadbare and exploded project.

Child.

THREADEN. adj. [from thread.] Made filthy, worsted stocking knave.

Shakespeare.

THRETFOLD. adj. [Saxon, Sax.]

Thrice repeated; consisting of three.

A threefold cord is not easily broken.

Locke.

By a threefold justice the world hath been governed from the beginning: by a justice natural, by which the parents and elders of families govern'd the children, in which the obedience was called for by piety; again, by a justice divine, drawn from the laws of God; and the obedience was called for science; and finally, by a justice civil, begun both the former, and the obedience to this was duty.

Locke.

A threefold off'ring to his altar bring,
A bull, a ram, a bow.

reflect a little; and the bill was thrown out.

Swift.

24. To Throw up. To resign angrily.

Bad games are thrown up too soon,
Until they're never to be won.
Experienced gamblers throw up their cards when they know the game is in the enemy's hand, without unnecessary vexation in playing it out.
Life we must not part with foolishly: it must not be thrown up in a pet, nor sacrificed to a quarrel.

Collier.

25. To Throw up. To emit; to eject;
to bring up.

Judge of the cause by the substances the patient throws up.

Arbutnot.

26. This is one of the words which is used with great latitude; but in all its uses, whether literal or figurative, it retains from its primitive meaning some notion of haste or violence.

To Throw. v. n.

1. To perform the act of casting.

2. To cast dice.

3. To Throw about. To cast about; to

Spenser.

Throw. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A cast; the act of casting or throwing.

The top he tore

From off a huge rock; and so right a throw
Made at our ship, that just before the prow
It overlew and fell.

Chapman.

He heav'd a stone, and, rising to the throw
He sent it in a whirlwind at the foe:
A tow'rs assaulted by so rude a stroke,
With all its lofty battlements had shook.

Addison.

2. A cast of dice; the manner in which the dice fall when they are cast.

If Hercules and Lichas play at dice
Which is the better man, the greater throw
May turn by fortune from the weaker hand:
So it Alcides beaten by his page.

Shakespeare.

If they cut finally, it is like a man's missing his cast when he throws dice for his life; his being, his happiness, and all is involved in the error of one throw.

South.

Suppose any particular order of the alphabet to be assigned, and the twenty-four letters cast at a venture, so as to fall in a line; it is many millions of millions odds to one against any single throw, that the assigned order will not be cast.

Bentley.

The world, where lucky throws to blockheads fall,

Knaves know the game, and honest men pay all

Young.

3. The space to which any thing is thrown.

Take to a bowl upon a table ground,
I've tumbled past the throw; and in his praise
Have, almost, stamp'd the leading.

Shakespeare.

The Sirenum Scaphi are sharp rocks that stand about a stone's throw from the south side of the island.

Addison.

Your youth admires
The threns and swellings of a Roman soul;
Cato's bold flights, the extravagance of virtue.

Addison.

6. The agony of childbirth: in this sense

it is written throce. See THROE.

T H R

The most pregnant wit in the world never brings forth any thing great without some pain and travail, pangs and throes before the delivery.

South.

But when the mother's throes begin to come,
The creature, pent within the narrow room,
Breaks his hind prison.

Dryden.

Say, my friendship wants him
To help me bring to light a manly birth,
Which to the world I shall disclose,
Or, if he fail me, perish in my throes.

Dryden.

All mols bath here and there little stalks, besides the low thum.

Bacon.

Would our thrum-capp'd ancestors find fault
For want of lagar tong, or spoons for salt?

King.

To THRU. v. a. To grate; to play coarsely.

Blunderbusses planted in every loop-hole, go off constantly at the squeaking of a fiddle and the thrumming of a guitar.

Dryden.

THRUSH. n. f. [þrurc, Saxon; turdus,
Latin.]

1. A small singing bird.

Of singing-birds they have hennets, goldfinches, blackbirds, and thrushes.

Carew.

Pain, and a fine thrush, have been severally endeavouring to call off my attention; but both in vain.

Pope.

2. [from thrust: as we say, a push; a breaking out.] By this name are called small, round, superficial ulcerations, which appear first in the mouth; but as they proceed from the obstruction of the emulsaries of the saliva, by the lentor and viscosity of the humour, they may affect every part of the alimentary duct, except the thick guts: they are just the same in the inward parts as scabs in the skin, and fall off from the inside of the bowels
like a crust: the nearer they approach to a white colour the less dangerous.

Arbutnot.

To THRUST. v. a. [trufito, Lat.]

1. To push any thing into matter, or between close bodies.

Thrust in thy sickle, and reap.

Revelations.

2. To push; to move with violence; to drive. It is used of persons or things.

They should not only not be thrust out, but also have cities and grants of their lands new made to them.

Spenser.

When the King comes, offer him no violence,
Unless he seek to thrust you out by force.

Shakespeare.

Lock up my doors, and when you hear the drum,
Clamber not you up to the casements then,
Nor thrust your head into the publick streets.

Shakespeare.

When the ass saw the angel, the thrust herself unto the wall, and crush'd Balaam's foot.

Numbers.

On this condition will I make a covenant with you, that I may thrust out all your right eyes.

Samuel.

She caught him by the feet; but Gehazi came near to thrust her away.

2 Kings.

The prince shall not take of the people's inheritance, by oppression to thrust them out.

Isaiah.

Thou Capernaum, which art exalted to heaven shalt be thrust down to hell.

Luke.

Rich, then lord chancellor, a man of quick and lively delivery of speech, but as of Neau birth to prone to thrust forwards the ruin of great persons, in this manner spake.

Heyward.

They
In hate of kings shall cast anew the frame,
And thrust out Collatine that bore their name.

moon, and stars, as if we were villains on necessity, and all that we are evil in, by a divine thrusting on.

Shakespeare.

6. To obtrude; to intrude.
Who's there, I say? How dare you thrust your felves

Shakespeare.

Into my private meditations?

Shakespeare.

I go to meet
The noble Brutus, thrusting this report
Into his ears.

Shakespeare.

Should he not do as rationally, who took physick from any one who had taken on himself the name of physician, or thrust himself into that employment?

Locke.

To THRUST. v. n.

1. To make a hostile push; to attack with a pointed weapon.

2. To squeeze in; to put himself into any place by violence.

I'll be a Spartan while I live on earth;
But, when in heav'n, I'll stand next Hercules,
And thrust between my father and the god.

Dryden.

thrusts.

THRUSTLE. n. f. [from thrust.] The thrush;
the thristle.

No thrushes thrill the bramble-bush forsake;
No chirping lark the welkin thence invokes.

Gray.

To THRYEALLOW. v. a. [thrice and allow.] To give the third ploughing in summer.

Thryfallow betime for destroying her weed,
Lest thistle and docke sal a blooming and feed.

Tyler.

THUMB. n. f. [þuma, Sax.] The short strong finger answering to the other four.

Here I have a pilot's thumb,
Wreck'd as homeward he did come.

Shakespeare.

When he is dead you will wear him in clump rings, as the Turks did Scamander. Dryden.
Every man in Turkey is of some trade; Shakspeare.
Arbut was a maker of ivory rings, which the Turks wear upon their thumbs when they shoot their arrows. Brome.

The hand is divided into four fingers bending forwards, and one opposite bending backwards, called the thumb, to join with them severally or united, whereby it is fitted to lay hold of objects.

Ray.

heavy dead dull blow with something blunt.

And blund'ring still with smarting rump,
He gave the knight's steed such a thump
As made him reel. Hudibras.

Before, behind, the blows are dealt; around
Their hollow sides the rattling thumps rebound.

Dryden.

Their thumps and bruises might turn to account,
If they could beat each other into good manners.

Addison.

The watchmen gave so great a thump at my door, that I awaked at the knock. Tatler.

To THUMP. v. a. To beat with dull heavy blows.

Those bastard Britons, whom our fathers
Have in their land beaten, bobbed and thumped.

Shakspeare.

To THUMP. v. a. To fall or strike with a dull heavy blow.

A stone

Levell'd so right, it thump'd upon
His manly paunch, with such a force,

As almost beat him off his horse. Hudibras.

Swift.

THUMPER. n. f. [from thump.] The person or thing that thumps.

THUNDER. n. f. [Donber, Sunon, Sax. dunder, Swedish; donder, Dutch; tonnerre, French.]

1. Thunder is a most bright flame rising on a sudden, moving with great violence, and with a very rapid velocity, through the air, according to any determination, upwards from the earth, horizontally, obliquely, downwards, in a right line, or in several right lines, as it were in serentine tracts, joined at various angles, and commonly ending with a loud noise or rattling. Muschenbrock.

2. In popular and poetick language, thunder is commonly the noise, and lightning the flash; though thunder is sometimes taken for both.

I do not bid the thunder bearer shoot,
Nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Jove. Shakspeare.

The revenging gods

Gainst panicles all the thunder bend. Shakspeare.

The thunder

Wing'd with red lightning and impetuous rage,
Perhaps hath spent his shafts, and ceases now
To below through the vast and boundless deep.

Milton.

3. Any loud noise or tumultuous violence.

So fierce he laid about him, and dealt blows
On either side, that neither mail could hold
No shield defend the thunder of his throws.

Spenser.

Here will we face this form of insolence,
Nor fear the noisy thunder; let it roll,
Then bark, and spend at once his idle rage. Rome.

To THUNDER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make thunder.

His nature is too noble for the world;
He would not suffer Neptune for his trident,
Nor Jove for a power to thunder. Shakspeare.

2. To make a loud or terrible noise.

So soon as some few notable examples had thundered a duty into the subjects hearts, he soon drew no benefit of suspicion. Shakspeare.

His dreadful name late through all Spain did thunder,

And Hercules' two pillars standing near Did make to quake and fear. Spenser.

His dreadful voice no more
Would thunder in my ears. Milton.

Like a black sheet the whelming billow spread,
Burst o'er the boat, and thunder'd on his head.

Pope.

To THUNDER. v. a.

1. To emit with noise and terrour.

Oracles severe

Were daily thunder'd in our general's ear,
That by his daughter's blood we must appease
Diana's kindled wrath. Dryden.

2. To publish any denunciation or threat.

An archdeacon, as being a prelate, may thunder out an ecclesiastical censure. Ascham.

THUNDERBOLT. n. f. [thunder and bolt,
as it signifies an arrow.]

1. Lightning; the arrows of heaven.

If I had a thunderbolt in mine eye, I can tell who should down. Shakspeare.

Let the lightning of this thunderbolt, which hath been so severe a punishment to one, be a terror to all. King Charles.

My heart does beat,

As if 'twere forging thunderbolts for Jove. Denham.

Who can omit the Gracchi, who declare
The Scipios' worth, whose thunderbolts of war?

Dryden.

The most remarkable piece in Antonine's pillar, is Jupiter Pluvius sending down rain on the fainting army of Marcus Aurelius, and thunderbolts on his enemies; which is the greatest confirmation of the story of the Christian legion. Addison.

2. Fulmination; denunciation: properly ecclesiastical.

He severely threatens such with the thunderbolt of excommunication. Hakewill.

THUNDERCLAP. n. f. [thunder and clap.]
Explosion of thunder.

The kindly bird that bears Jove's thunderclap,
One day did learn the simple scabbard,

Proud of his highest service, and good hap,
That made all other fowls his thralls to be. Spenser.

When some dreadful thunderclap is nigh,
The winged fire shoots swiftly through the sky;

Strikes and confuses are fear'd it does appear,
And, by the sudden ill, prevents the fear. Dryden.

When suddenly the thunderclap was heard,
It took us unprepared and out of guard. Dryden.

THUNDER. n. f. [from thunder.] The power that thunders.

How dare you, ghosts,

Accuse the thunderer, whose bolt you know
Sky-planted, batters all rebelling coasts? Shakspeare.

Had the old Greeks discover'd your abuse,
Crete had not been the cradle of your god;

On that small island they had look'd with scorn,
And in Great Britain thought the thunderer born.

Waller.

When the bold Typhus

For'd great Jove from his own heav'n to fly,
The lesser gods, that stor'd his prosperous fate,
All suffer'd in the evil'd thunderer's fate. Dryden.

THUNDEROUS. adj. [from thunder.] Producing thunder.

Look in and see each blissful deity,
How he before the thunderer thron'd doth lie. Mt.

THUNDERSHOWER. n. f. [thunder and shower.] A rain accompanied with thunder.

The concert is long in delivering, and at last it comes like a thunder shower, full of sulphur and darkness, with a terrible crack. Stillingfleet.

In thunder showers the winds and clouds are oftentimes contrary to one another, especially if hail falls, the sultry weather below directing the wind one way and the cold above the clouds another. Denham.

THUNDERSTONE. n. f. [thunder and stone.]

A stone fabulously supposed to be emitted by thunder; thunderbolt.

Fear no more the lightning flash,
Nor th' all-dreaded thunder-stone. Shakspeare.

To THUNDERSTRIKE. v. a. [thunder and strike.]

1. To blast or hurt with lightning.

I remained as a man thunder-stricken, not daring,
may not able, to behold that power. Sidney.

The overthrown he rais'd, and as a herd
Of goats, or tinorous flock, together throng'd.

Drove them before him thunder-struck. Milton.

With the voice divine
Nigh thunder-struck, th' exalted man, to whom Such high attit was giv'n, a while survey'd

With wonder. Milton.

'Tis said that thunder-struck Euceladas Lies stretch'd supine. Addison.

2. To astonish with any thing terrible.

Fear from our hearts took
The very life; to be so thunder-struck
With such a voice. Chapman.

THUNDEROUS. adj. [thunderer, Latin.]
Bearing frankincense.

THURIFICATION. n. f. [thuris and facio, Latin.] The act of fuming with incense;
the act of burning incense.

The several acts of worship which are required to be performed to images are processions, genuflections, thurifications, devotions, and oblations.

Stillingfleet.

THURSDAY. n. f. [thorsday, Danish;
from thor: Thor was the son of Odin;

yet in some of the northern parts they worshipp'd the supreme deity under his name, attributing the power over all things, even the inferior deities, to him.

Stillingfleet. The fifth day of the week.

THUS. adv. [Sur, Saxon.]

1. In this manner; in this wife.

It cannot be that they who speak thus, should thus judge. Hooker.

The knight him calling asked who he was?
Who lifting up his head, him answer'd thus. Spenser.

I returned with similar proof enough,
With tokens thus, and thus. Shakspeare.

To be thus is nothing;

But to be safely thus. Shakspeare.

I have kindled against the Lord, and thus and thus have I done. Job.

The Romans used a like wife endeavour, and wholes in a higher, in a wiser strain, making com-cord a deity; thus seeking peace, not by an oath, but by prayer. Holaday.

That the principle that sets on work these organs, is nothing else but the modification of matter thus or thus posited, is false. Judge Hale.

Beware, I warn thee yet, to tell thy griefs
In terms becoming majesty to hear.

I warn thee thus, because I know thy temper
Is insolent. Dryden.

Thus in the triumph of soft peace I reign.

Dryden.

All were attentive to the godlike man,
When from his lofty couch he thus began.

Dryden.

2. To this degree; to this quantity.

A countess of state in Spain said to his master,
I will tell you majesty thus much for your comfort, your majesty hath but two enemies; whereof the one is all the world, and the other your own ministers. Lacon.

Even thus wife, that is, thus peaceable, were very leathens; thus peaceable among themselves, though without grace, thus peaceable by wife nature very like grace. Hobday.

He said, Thus far extend, thus far thy bounds.

Milton.

Thus much concerning the first earth, and its production and form.

No man reasonably pretends to know thus much,
but he must pretend to know all things. Tillotson.

THY

This you must do to inherit life; and if you have come up thus far, actually partake in it. Wals.
TO THWACK. v. a. [Saccian, Saxon.] To strike with something blunt and heavy; to thrash; to bang; to belabour. A ludicrous word.

He shall not stay;
 We'll thwack him hence with distaffs. Shakespeare.
 Nick fell foul upon John Bull, to snatch the cudgel he had in his hand, that he might thwack Lewis with it. Arbutnot.

These long fellows, as lightly as they are, should find their jackets well thwacked. Arbutnot.
THWACK. n. f. [from the verb.] A heavy hard blow.

But Talgol first with a hard thwack
 Twice bruised his head, and twice his back. Hudibras.

They place several pots of rice, with cudgels in the neighbourhood of each pot; the monkeys descend from the trees, take up the arms, and belabour one another with a storm of thwacks. Addison.

THWART. adj. [Thwyr, Sax. dwars, Dut.] 1. Transverse; crooked to something else.

This life to several spheres than most ascribe, Mov'd contrary with thwart obliquities. Milton.
THWART. v. a.

1. To cross; to lie or come cross any thing.

Swift as a shooting star
 In autumn thwarts the night. Milton.
 You stream of light, a thousand ways
 Upward and downward thwarting and convolv'd. Thomson.

2. To cross; to oppose; to traverse; to contravene.

Some sixteen months and longer might have staid,
 If crooked fortune had not thwarted me. Shakespeare.
 Laffer had been

The thwartings of your dispositions, if You had not shew'd how you were dispos'd
 Ere they lack power to cross you. Shakespeare.
 The understanding and will then never disagreed;
 For the propolis of the one never thwarted the inclinations of the other. South.

The rays both good and bad, of equal pow'r,
 Each thwarting other made a mingled hour. Dryden.
 In vain did I the godlike youth deplore:
 The more I begg'd, they thwarted me the more. Addison.

Neptune aton'd, his wrath shall now refrain,
 Or thwart the synod of the gods in vain. Pope.
 By thwarting passions told, by cares oppress'd,
 He found the tempest pictur'd in his breast. Young.

THWART. v. n. To be in opposition to.

It is easy to be imagined what reception any proposition shall find, that shall at all thwart with these internal oracles. Locke.

THWARTING. n. f. [from thwart.] The act of crossing, &c. as the verb.

THWARTINGLY. adv. [from thwarting.] Oppositely; with opposition.

THY. pronoun. [Thin, Sax.] Of thee; belonging to thee; relating to thee: the possessive of thou. See THOU.

Whatever God did say,
 Is all thy clear and smooth uninterrupted way. Cowley.

Th' example of the heavenly lark,
 Thy fellow poet, Cowley, mark. Cowley.
 These are thy works, parent of good! Milton.

THYME wood. n. f. A precious wood.

The merchandise of gold and all thyme wood are departed from thee. Revelations.

THYME. n. f. [thym, Fr. thymus, Lat.] A plant.

The thyme hath a labiate flower, consisting of one leaf, whose upper-lip is erect, and generally split in two, and the under-lip is divided into three parts; out of the flower-cup arises the pointal, accompanied by four embryos, which afterward become to many seeds, inclosed in a beak, which before was the flower-cup; to these marks must be added hard turgid stalks, and the flowers gathered into heads. Müller.

No more, my goats, shall I behold you climb
 The steepy cliffs, or crop the flow'ry thyme. Dryden.
THYSELF. pronoun reciprocal. [thy and self.]

1. It is commonly used in the oblique cases, or following the verb.

Come high or low,
 Thyself and office dently show. Shakespeare.
 It must and shall be so; content thyself. Shakespeare.

2. In poetical or solemn language it is sometimes used in the nominative.

These goods thyself can on thyself bestow. Dryden.

TIA'RA. } n. f. [tiare, Fr. tiara, Lat.] A

TIA'RA. } drefs for the head; a diadem.

His back was turn'd, but not his brightness hid;
 Of beaming sunny rays a golden tiar
 Circled his head. Milton.

This royal robe and this tiara wore
 Old Priam, and this golden sceptre bore
 In full assemblies. Dryden.

A tur wreath'd her head with many a fold,
 Her waist was circled with a zone of gold. Pope.
 Farer she seem'd, distinguish'd from the rest,
 And better men disclos'd, as better dress:
 A bright tiara round her forehead ty'd
 To joster bounds confin'd its rising pride. Prior.

TO TICE. v. a. [from entice.] To draw; to allure.

Lovely enchanting language, sugar-cane,
 Honey of roses, whether wilt thou try?
 Hath some fond lover to'd thee to thy bane?
 And wilt thou leave the church, and love a fly? Herbert.

TICK. n. f. [This word seems contracted from ticket, a tally on which debts are scored.]

1. Score; trust.

If thou hast the heart to try 't,
 I'll lend thee back thyself awhile,
 And once more for that carcase vile Fight upon tick. Hudibras.

When the money is got into hands that have bought all that they have need of, whoever needs any thing else must go on tick, or borrow for it. Locke.

You would see him in the kitchen weighing the beef and butter, paying ready money, that the maids might not run a tick at the market. Arbutnot.

2. [tiqne, Fr. teke, Dut.] The louse of dogs or sheep.

Would the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it! I had rather be a tick in a sheep, than such a valiant ignorance. Shakespeare.

3. The case which holds the feathers of a bed.

TO TICK. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To run on score.

2. To trust; to score.

The money went to the lawyers; council wo'n't tick. Arbutnot.

TICKEN. } n. f. The same with tick.

TICKING. } A sort of strong linen for bedding.

TICKET. n. f. [etiquet, Fr.] A token of any right or debt, upon the delivery of which admission is granted, or a claim acknowledged.

There should be a paymaster appointed, of special trust, which should pay every man according to his captain's ticket, and the account of the clerk of his hand. Spenser.

In a lottery with one prize, a single ticket is only enriched, and the rest are all blanks. Collier.

Let tops or fortune fly which way they will,
 Diffinds all lots of tickets or codills. Pope.

TO TICKLE. v. a. [titillo, Latin.]

1. To affect with a prurient sensation by slight touches.

TID

Difficultly tickled. How do you feel?
 Can tickle where the wound is? Shakespeare.
 The mind is moved in great vehemency only by tickling some parts of the body. Bacon.

There is a sweetest in good verie, which tickles even while it hurts; and no man can be heartily angry with him who pleases him as with his will. Dryden.

It is a good thing to laugh at any rate; and if a straw can tickle a man, it is an instrument of happiness. Dryden.

2. To please by slight gratifications.

Duke's, that of all manners of fire could best conceive of golden cloquence, being withstood by Mulidorus's praises, had his brain so turned, that he became slave to that which he had sworn to be his servant offered to give him. Shelley.

Expectation tickling Scotch spirits, Sets all on hazard. Shakespeare.

Such a nature
 Ticked with good success, diffinds the shadow
 Which it treads on at noon. Shakespeare.

I cannot rule my spleen,
 My scorn rebels, and tickles me within. Dryden.

Dance at the ball; in streets but scarce allow'd
 To tickle, on thy straw, the stupid crowd. Dryden.

A drunkard's the habitual tickle after his cups drives to the tavern, though he has in his view the loss of health, and perhaps of the joys of another life, the loss of which is such a good as he considers is far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine. Locke.

TO TICKLE. v. n. To feel titillation.

He with secret joy therefore Did tickle away his eye y' veen,
 And his little heart, brought with all treach'ry's store,
 Was fill'd with hope, his purpose to perform. Pope.

TICKLE. adj. [I know not whence to deduce the sense of this word.] Tottling; unfixed; unstable; easily overturned.

When the last O'Neil began to stand upon some tickle terms, this fellow, called baron of Duncannon, was set up to beat him. Spenser.

Thy head stands so tickle on thy shoulders, that a milkmaid, if she be in love, may fight it off. Shakespeare.

The state of Nonnandy Stands on a tickle point, now they are gone. Shakespeare.

TICKLISH. adj. [from tickle.]

1. Sensible to titillation; easily tickled.

The palm of the hand, though it be less than a skin as the other parts, yet is not ticklish, because it is accustomed to be touched. Bacon.

2. Tottling; uncertain; unfixed.

Ireland was a ticklish and unsettled state, more easy to receive dissensions and mutations than England was.

Did it stand upon so ticklish and tottering foundation as some men's fancy hath placed it on, it would be no wonder should it frequently vary. Bacon.

3. Difficult; nice.

How shall our author hope a gentle fate,
 Who dares most impudently not translate?
 It had been civil, in these ticklish times,
 To fetch his fools and knaves from foreign climes. South.

TICKLISHNESS. n. f. [from ticklish.] The state of being ticklish.

TICKTACK. n. f. [titratrac, Fr.] A game at tables. Bailey.

TID. adj. [tybden, Sax.] Tender; soft; nice.

TIDBIT. n. f. [tid and bit.] A dainty.

TO TIDDLE. } v. a. [from tid.] To use
TO TIDDER. } tenderly; to fondle.

TIDE. n. f. [tyb, Saxon; tyd, Dutch and Islandick.]

1. Time; season; while.

There they alight, in hope themselves to hide
 From the fierce heat, and rest their weary limbs in shade. Spenser.

They two forth passing
 Received those two fair brides, their love's delight
 Which, at the appointed tide,
 Each one did make his bride. Spenser.

What hath this day brought?
That in its golden letter should be set
Among the high tides of the calendar? Shakespeare.
At new-year's tide following, the king chose him master of the horse. Wotton.

1. Alternate ebb and flow of the sea.

That motion of the water called tides, is a rising and falling of the sea: the cause of this is the attraction of the moon, whereby the part of the water in the great ocean which is nearest the moon, being most strongly attracted, is raised higher than the rest; and the part opposite to it being least attracted, is also higher than the rest; and these two opposite rises of the surface of the water in the great ocean following the motion of the moon from east to west, and striking against the large coasts of the continents, from thence rebound back again, and so make floods and ebbs in narrow seas and rivers. Locke.

3. Commotion; violent confluence.

As in the tides of people once up, there went not stirring winds to make them more rough, in this people did light upon two ringleaders. Bacon.

4. Stream; course.

Thou art the ruins of the noblest man
That ever lived in the tide of times. Shakespeare.
The rapid currents drive
Towards the retreating sea their furious tide. Milton.

But let not all the gold which Tagus hides,
And pays the sea in tributary tides,
Be bribe sufficient to corrupt thy breast,
Or violate with dreams thy peaceful rest. Dryden.

Flows from th' exhilarating fount. Philips.
To TIDE. v. a. [from the noun.] To drive with the stream.

Their images, the relics of the wreck,
Torn from the naked poop, are tided back
By the wild waves, and rudely thrown ashore. Dryden.

To TIDE. v. n. To pour a flood; to be agitated by the tide.

When from his dunt the foe still backward shrunk,
Wading within the Ouse, he dealt his blows,
And sent them, rolling, to the tidings Humber. Philips.

TIDEGATE. n. f. [tide and gate.] A gate through which the tide passes into a basin. Bailey.

TIDESMAN. n. f. [tide and man.] A tide-waiter or customhouse officer, who watches on board of merchant-ships till the duty of goods be paid, and the ships unloaded. Bailey.

TIDEWAITER. n. f. [tide and wait.] An officer who watches the landing of goods at the customhouse.

Employments will be in the hands of Englishmen; nothing left for Irishmen but vicarages and dewarries places. Swift.

TIDILY. adv. [from tidy.] Neatly;
readily.

TIDINESS. n. f. [from tidy.] Neatness;
readiness.

TIDINGS. n. f. [tidan, Saxon, to happen, to betide; tidende, Islandick.] News; an account of something that has happened;
incidents related.

When her eyes she on the dwarf had set,
And saw the signs that deadly tidings speak,
She fell to ground for sorrowful regret. Spenser.
I shall make my master glad with these tidings. Shakespeare.

They win
Great numbers of each nation to receive,
With joy, the tidings brought from heav'n. Milton.

Fortius, thy looks speak somewhat of importance:
What tidings doth thou bring? methinks I see Casual gladness sparkling in thy eyes. Addison.

The messengers of these glad tidings, by whom the covenant of mercy was proposed and ratified, was the eternal Son of his bosom. Rogers.

TTDY. adj. [tide, Islandick.]

1. Seasonable.

If weather be faire and tidy, thy grain
Make speedie carriage, for leare of a raine. Tesser.

2. Neat; ready.

Wherever by yon barley-mow I pass,
Before my eyes will trip the tidy lads. Gay.

3. It seems to be here put by mistake or irony for untidy.

Thou whorson tiddy Bartholomew boar-pig, when wilt thou leave fighting? Shakespeare.

To TIE. v. a. [tjan, tigan, Saxon.]

1. To bind; to fasten with a knot.
Tie the knee to the cart, and bring their calves home from them. Samuel.

Thousands of men and women, tied together in chains, were, by the cruel Turks, enforced to run as fast as their horses. Kneller.

2. To knit; to complicate.

We do not tie this knot with an intention to puzzle the argument; but the harder it is tied, we shall feel the pleasure more sensibly when we come to loose it. Burnet.

3. To hold; to fasten; to join so as not easily to be parted.

In bond of virtuous love together tied,
Together serv'd they, and together died. Fairfax.
The intermediate ideas tie the extremes so firmly together, and the probability is so clear, that assent necessarily follows it. Locke.

Certain theorems resolve propositions which depend on them, and are as firmly made out from thence, as if the mind went afresh over every link of the whole chain that ties them to first self-evident principles. Locke.

4. To hinder; to obstruct: with up in- tensive.

Death, that hath ta'en her hence to make me
wail,
Ties up my tongue, and will not let me speak. Shakespeare.

Melantius, stay,
You have my promise; and my last word
Retrains my tongue, but ties not up my sword. Waller.

Honour and good-nature may tie up his hands;
but as these would be very much strengthened by reason and principle, so without them they are only infruits. Addison.

5. To oblige; to constrain; to restrain; to confine.

Although they profess they agree with us touching a prescript form of prayer to be used in the church, they have declared that it shall not be prescribed as a thing whereunto they will tie their ministers. Hooker.

It is the cowardly terror of his spirit,
That dares not undertake; he'll not feel wrongs
Which tie him to an answer. Shakespeare.

Cannot God make any of the appropriate acts of worship to become due only to himself? cannot he tie us to perform them to him? Stillingfleet.

They tie themselves so strictly to unity of place, that you never see in any of their plays a being change in the middle of an act. Dryden.

Not tied to rules of policy, you find Revenge lets sweet than a forgiving mind. Dryden.
No one seems less tied up to a form of words. Leake.

The mind should, by several rules, be tied down to this, at last, uneasy talk; and will give it facility. Locke.

They have no uneasy expectations of what is to come, but are ever tied down to the present moment. Arbuthnot.

A healthy man ought not to tie himself up to strict rules, nor to abstain from any sort of food in common use. Arbuthnot.

6. It may be observed of tie, that it has often the particles up and down joined to it, which are, for the most part, little more than emphatical, and which, when united with this word, have at least consequentially the same meaning.

TIE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Knot; fastening.

2. Bond; obligation.

The rebels that had shaken off the great yoke of obedience, had likewise cast away the latter tie of respect. South.

No forest, cave, or savage den
Holds more pernicious bonds than men;
Vows, oaths, and contracts they devise,
And tell us they are sacred ties. Waller.

3. A knot of hair.

The well-sworn ties an equal homage claim,
And either shoulder has its share of fame. Young.

TIER. n. f. [tiere, tieire, old French; tyger, Dutch.] A row; a rank.

Formous, in his choler, discharg'd a tier of great ordnance amongst the thickest of them. Kneller.

TIERCE. n. f. [tiers, tiercier, Fr.] A vessel holding the third part of a pipe.

Go now deny his tierce. Pen Jonson.

Wt, like tierce claret, when 't begins to pall,
Neglected lies, and 's of no use at all;
But in its full perfection of decay
Turns vine gar, and comes again in play. Dorset.

TIERCE. n. f. [from tiers, Fr.] A triplet; three lines.

TIEF. n. f. [A low word, I suppose without etymology.]

1. Liquor; drink.

I, whom gripping penny furrows,
And hunger, lure attendant upon want,
With scanty meals, and small and stiff,
Wretched repast! my meagre corps sustain. Philips.

2. A fit of peevishness or sullenness; a pet.

To TIEF. v. n. To be in a pet; to quarrel. A low word.

TIEFANY. n. f. [tiffer, to dress up, old
Fr. Skinner.] Very thin filk.

The smock of sulphur will not black a paper,
and is commonly used by women to whiten tiffanies. Brown.

TIEK. n. f. [In architecture.] The shaft of a column from the atragal to the capital. Bailey.

TIGER. n. f. [tigre, Fr. tigris, Latin.] A fierce beast of the leonine kind.

When the blast of war blows in your ear,
Then imitate the action of the tiger;

Sudden the fancies, fann'd upon the blood, Shakspeare.
Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,
The arm'd rhinoceros, or Hyrcanian tiger;

Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves
Shall never tremble. Shakspeare.

Has the steer,
At whose strong chest the deadly tiger hangs,
Ever plow'd for him? Thomson.

TIGHT. adj. [dicht, Dutch.]

1. Tense; close; not loose.

If the centre holes be not very deep, and the pikes fill them not very tight, the strength of the spring will alter the centre holes. Mason.

I do not like this running knot, it holds too tight; I may be stifled all of a sudden. Arbuthnot.
Every joint was well grooved; and the door did not move on hinges, but up and down like a sash, which kept my closet so tight that very little water came in. Swift.

2. Free from fluttering rage; less than heat.

A tight mind, ere he for wine can ask,
Girdle his meaning, and unloose the mask. Dryden.
The girl was a tight clever wench as any. Arbuthnot.

O Thomas, I'll make a loving wife;
I'll spin and card, and keep our children tight. Gay.

Drift her again gentle and neat,
And rather tight than great. Swift.

To TIGHTEN. v. a. [from tight.] To straiten; to make close.

TIGHTEN. n. f. [from tighten.] A riband or string by which women straiten their clothes.

TIGHTLY. adv. [from tight.]

1. Closely; not loosely.

2. Neatly; not idly.

*Hold, Arrah, bear you these letters tightly;
Said like my pinnace to these golden shores. Shakspeare.
Huddle your pinnace home with dexterity;
tightly, I say, go tightly to your business; you have cost me much. Dryden.*

TIGHTNESS. n. f. [from tight.]

1. Closeness; not looseness.

The bones are inflexible; which arises from the greatness of the number of corpuscles that compose them, and the strength and tightness of their union.
Woodward.

2. Neatness.

TIGRESS. n. f. [from tiger.] The female of the tiger.

It is reported of the tigress, that several spots rise in her skin when she is angry. Addison.

TIKE. n. f. [tik, Swedish; teke, Dutch;
tigue, French.]

1. The louse of dogs or sheep. See TICK.
Lice and tikes are bred by the sweat close kept,
and somewhat arched by the hair. Bacon.

2. It is in Shakspere the name of a dog, in which sense it is used in Scotland.
[from tijk, Runick, a little dog.]
Avant, you ears!
Hound or spaniel, brabe or hym,
Or bobtail tike, or trundle tail. Shakspeare.

TILE. n. f. [tegle Saxon; tegel, Dutch;
tuile, Fr. tegola, Italian.] Thin plates of baked clay used to cover houses.

The roof is all tile, or lead, or stone. Bacon.
Earth turned into brick serves for building as stone doth; and the like of tile. Bacon.

Just at the window he climbs, or o'er the tiles.
Milton.

Worse than all the chattering tithe, and worse
Than thousand padders was the poet's curse.
Dryden.

Tile pins made of oak, or fir, they drive into holes made in the plain tiles, to hang them upon their lathing. Mason.

TO TILE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with tiles.

Moss growth chiefly upon ridges of houses tiled or thatched. Bacon.

Sonnets or elegies to Chloris
Might raise a house above two stories;
A lyric ode would flate; a catch
Would tile; an epigram wou'd thatch. Swift.

2. To cover as tiles.

The rafters of my body, bone,
Being fill'd with you, the muscle, sinew and vein,
Which tile this house, will come again. Donne.

TILER. n. f. [tailier, Fr. from tile.] One whose trade is to cover houses with tiles.

A Flemish tiler, falling from the top of a house upon a Spaniard, killed him; the next of the blood prosecuted his death; and when he was offered pecuniary recompence, nothing would serve him but his talonis: whereupon the judge said to him, he should go up to the top of the house, and then fall down upon the tiler. Bacon.

TILING. n. f. [from tile.] The roof covered with tiles.

They went upon the house-top, and let him down through the tiling with his couch before Jesus. Luke.

TILL. n. f. A money box in a shop.
They break up counters, doors and tills,
And leave the empty chests in view. Swift.

TILL. prep. [til, Sax.] To the time of.
Unhappy till the last, the kind releasing knell.
Cowley

TILL NOW. To the present time.

I learn'd of hylar timber cotes to frame,
Such as might save my sheep and me from shame.

For the body of the ships no nation doth equal England for the oak and timber wherewith to build them; but there must be a great providence used,
that our ship timber be not unnecessarily wasted.
Bacon.

The straw was laid below,
Of chips and ferewood was the second row;
The third of greens, and timber newly fell'd. Dryden.

There are hardly any countries that are destitute of timber of their own growth. Woodward.
Upon these walls they plant quick and timber trees, which thrive exceedingly. Mortimer.
Who set the twigs, shall be remember,
That is in haste to sell the timber?
And what shall of thy woods remain,
Except the box that threw the maul?
2. The main trunk of a tree.

We take
From every tree, top, bark, and part of th' timber;
And though we leave it with a root this heckt,
The air will drain the sap. Shakespeare.
3. The main beams of a fabrick.
4. Materials, ironically.
Such dispositions are the very errors of human nature; and yet they are the fittest timber to make pillicks of, like to knee timber, that is good for ships to be tacked, but not for houses that shall stand firm. Bacon.

TO TIMBER. v. n. [from the noun.] To

The evening Nubian hears the timbrel sound. Pope.

TIME. n. f. [Cymric, Sax. tym, Erse.]
1. The measure of duration.

This consideration of duration, as set out by certain periods, and marked by certain measures or epochs, is that which most properly we call time.
Locke.

Time is like a fashionable host,
That slightly shakes his parting guest by th' hand,
But with his arms out-stretch'd, as he would fly,
Grasps the incomer. Shakespeare.

Come what come may,
Time and the hour runs through the roughest day.
Shakespeare.

Nor will polished amber, although it send forth a gross exhalation, be found a long time defective upon the exactest scale. Brown.

Time, which consisteth of parts, can be so part of infinite duration, or of eternity; for then there would be infinite time past to day, which to-morrow will be more than infinite. Time is one thing, and infinite duration is another. Grew.

2. Space of time.
Daniel desired that he would give him time, and that he would shew him the interpretation. Daniel.

If a law be enacted to continue for a certain time, when that time is elapsed, the law ceaseth without any farther abrogation. White.
He for the time remained stupidly good. Milton.
No time is allowed for digressions. Swift.

3. Interval.
Pomanders, and knots of powders, you may have continually in your hand; whereas perfumes you can take but at times. Bacon.

4. Life considered as employed, or destined to employment.

A great devourer of his time, was his agency for men of quality. Fell.

kinds of virtue, lie open to those who are masters of themselves, their time, and their fortune. Law.

5. Season; proper time.
To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose. Ecclesiasticus.

They were cut down out of time, whose foundation was overlaid with a flood. Job.
He found nothing but leaves on it; for the time of figs was not yet. Mark.
Knowing the time, that it is high time to awake out of sleep. Romans.
Short were her marriage joys; for in the prime
Of youth her lord expired before his time. Dryden.
I hope I come in time, if not to make,
At least to save, your fortune and your honour.

The time will come when we shall be forced to bring our evil ways to remembrance, and then consideration will do us little good. Culamy.

6. A considerable space of duration; continuance; process of time.
Fight under him, there's plunder to be had;
A captain is a very gainful trade:
And when in service your best days are spent,
In time you may command a regiment. Dryden.
In time the mind reflects on its own operations about the ideas got by sensation, and thereby stores itself with a new set of ideas, ideas of reflection.

One imagines, that the terrestrial matter which is showered down along with rain enlarges the bulk of the earth, and that it will in time bury all things under ground. Woodward.

I have resolved to take time, and, in spite of all misfortune, to write you, at intervals, a long letter. Swift.

7. Age; part of duration distinct from other parts.

They shall be given into his hand until a time and times. Daniel.
If we should impute the heat of the season unto the co-operation of any stars with the sun, it seems more favourable for our times to ascribe the same unto the constellation of Leo. Brown.

The way to please being to imitate nature, the poets and the painters, in ancient times, and in the best ages, have studied her. Dryden.

8. Past time.
I was the man in th' moon when time was. Shakespeare.

9. Early time.

Stanley at Radworth-field, though he came some enough to save his life, yet he found lodg enough to enlarge it. Barry.

If they acknowledge repentance and a more strict obedience to be one time or other necessary, they imagine it is time enough yet to set about these duties. Regenn.

10. Time considered as affording opportunity.

The earl lost no time, but marched day and night. Clarendon.
He continued his delights till all the enemies were past through his quarters; nor did then pursue them in any time. Clarendon.

I would ask any man that means to repent at his death, how he knows he shall have an hour's time for it? Duty of Men.

Time is lost, which never will renew,
While we too far the pleasing path pursue,
Surveying nature. Dryden.

11. Particular quality of some part of duration.

Comets, importing change of times and states,
Beardish your crystal tresses in the sky. Shakespeare.
All the prophets in their age, the times
Of great Messiah sing. Milton.
If any reply, that the times and manners of men will not bear such a practice, that is an answer from the mouth of a professed time-server. South.

12. Particular time.

Give order, that no suit of person
Have, any time, recourse unto the prisons.

When that company died, what time the fire devoured two hundred and fifty men. Numbers.
The work on me must light, when time shall be.
Milton.

A time will come, when my maturer mind
In Caesar's wars a nobler theme shall chuse.

These reservoirs of snow they cut, distributing them to several shops, that from time to time supply Naples. Addison.

13. Hour of childbirth.

She intended to stay till delivered; for she was within one month of her time. Clarendon.
The first time I saw a lady dressed in one of these petticoats, I blamed her for walking abroad when she was so near her time; but soon I found all the modish part of the sex as far gone as herself.
Spektator.

14. Repetition of any thing, or mention with reference to repetition.

Four times he cross'd the car of night. Milton.
Many times I have read of the like attempts begun, but never of any finished. Heylin.
Every single particle would have a sphere of void space around it many hundred thousand million million times bigger than the dimensions of that particle. Bentley.
Lord Oxford, I have now the third time mentioned in this letter, expects you. Swift.

15. Musical measure.

Musick do I hear!
Ha, ha! keep time. How four sweet musick is When time is broke, and no proportion kept!
Shakespeare.

You by the help of time and time
Can make that song which was but rhyme. Waller.

On their exalted wings
To the celestial orbs they climb,
And with th' harmonious spheres keep time. Dickens.

Heroes who o'ercome, or die,
Have their hearts hung extremely high;
The strings of which in battle's heat
Against their very corsets beat;
Keep time with their own trumpet's measure,
And yield them most excessive pleasure. Prior.

TO TIME. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To adapt to the time; to bring or do at a proper time.

There is no greater wisdom than well to time
the beginning, and outlets of things. Bacon.
It is hard to believe, that where his most numerous miracles were afforded, they should all want the advantage of the congruous things to give them their due weight and efficacy. Hammond.

The timing of things is a main point in the dispatch of all affairs. L'Estrange.
This 'tis to have a virtue out of season: Mercy is good, but kidge mistake its timing. Dryden.

A man's conviction should be strong, and so well timed, that worldly advantages may seem to have no share in it. Addison.

2. To regulate as to time.

To the same purpose old Epicharmus spoke, Who overlook'd the narrow and tum'd the stroke. Addison.

To TINE. v. a. [tyne, Sax.]

1. To kindle; to light; to set on fire.

TIN

Sniffling Atin is their chosen word.
Cosh of contention and hot vengeance tins'd.
Spenser.

The clouds
Judding or puff'd with winds, rude in their shock, Toss the faint lightning; whose throat flame driv'n down.
Milton.

Kisses the gummy bark of fir.
The priest with holy hands was seen to tins
The cloven wood, and pour the ruddy wine.
Dryden.

1. [man, Saxon.] To shut.

To TINE. v. n.

1. To rage; to smart. Spenser.

2. To fight.

Eden stain'd with blood of many a band
Of Scots and English both, that tins'd on his brand.
Spenser.

To TINGE. v. a. [tingo, Latin.] To im-pregnate or imbue with a colour or taste.

So Roger is something of an humourist; and his virtues, as well as imperfections, are tinged by a certain extravagance, which makes them particularly his.
Spenser.

A red powder mixed with a little blue, or a blue with a little red, doth not perfectly lose its colour;
but a white powder mixed with any colour is presently tinged with that colour, and is equally capable of being tinged with any colour whatever.
Newton.

If the eye be stung with any colour, as in the jaundice, so as to tinge pictures in the bottom of the eye with that colour, all objects appear tinged with the same colour.
Newton.

She lays some useful bile aside,
To tinge the chyle's insipid tide;
Else we should want both gibe and satire,
And all be dull with pure good-nature.
Prior.

The infusions of rhubarb and saffron tinge the wine with a high yellow.
Arbutnot.

TINGENT. adj. [tingens, Latin.] Having the power to tinge.

This wood, by the mixture it afforded, appeared to have its coloured part genuine; but as for the white part, it appears much less enriched with the tinted property.
Boyle.

TINGLASS. n. f. [tin and glass.] Bismuth.

To TINGLE. v. n. [tingelen, Dutch.]

1. To feel a sound, or the continuance of a sound, in the ears. This is perhaps rather tinkle.

The ears of them that hear it shall tingle. Bible.
When our ear tingles, we usually say that somebody is talking of us, which is an ancient conceit.
Brown.

2. To feel a sharp quick pain with a sensation of motion.

The pale boy senator yet tingling stands. Pope.

3. To feel either pain or pleasure with a sensation of motion. The sense of this word is not very well ascertained.

They suck pollution through their tingling veins.
Tucker.

In a palsy, sometimes the sensation or feeling is either totally abolished, or dull with a sense of tingling.
Arbutnot.

To TINK. v. n. [tinnio, Latin; tincan, Welsh.] To make a sharp shrill noise.

TINKER. n. f. [from tink, because their way of proclaiming their trade is to beat a kettle, or because in their work they make a tinkling noise.] A mender of old brails.

Am not I old Sly's son, by education a card-maker, and now by present profession a tinker?
Shakespeare.

My copper medals by the pond
May be with learned justice weigh'd:
To turn the balance, Orho's head
May be thrown in; and for the kettle,
The coin may mend a tinkler's kettle.
Prior.

TINKLE. v. s. [tinter, French; tinnio, Latin.]

To make a sharp quick noise; to tinkle.

TIN

The daughters of Zion are haughty, and walk with stretched out necks, making a tinkling with their feet.

His feeble hand a javelin threw,
Which flut'ring, seemed to loiter as it flew;
Just, and but barely, to the mark it held,
And faintly tinkled on the brazen shield. Dryden.

The sprightly horse

Moves to the music of his tinkling bells. Dodgson.

2. It seems to have been improperly used by Pope.

The wand'ring streams that shine between the hills.

The gruts that echo to the tinkling rills. Pope.

3. To hear a low quick noise.

With deeper brown the grove was overspread,
A sudden horror seiz'd his wildly head,
And his ears tinkled, and the colour fled. Dryden.

TINMAN. n. f. [tin and man.] A manufacturer of tin, or iron tinned over.

Dull thou never pop

Thy head into a tinman's shop? Prior.

TINNEER. n. f. [from tin; tin, Saxon.]

One who works in the tin mines.

The Cornish man, many of them could for a need live under ground, that were tinners. Bacon.

TINNY. adj. [from tin.] Abounding with tin.

Thole seas of sea that thrust into the tinny strand
Dryden.

TINPenny. n. f. A certain customary duty anciently paid to the tithingmen.

Bailey.

TINSEL. n. f. [etincelle, French.]

1. A kind of shining cloth.

A tinsel valther amber locks did throw,
That strove to cover what it could not hide.
Fairfax.

It's but a night-gown in respect of yours; cloth of gold and cuts, underdone with a bluish tinsel.
Shakespeare.

By Theirs' tinsel slipper'd feet,
And the songs of fawns sweet. Milton.

2. Any thing shining with false lustre; any thing showy and of little value.

For favours cheap and common who would strive?
Yet scatter'd here and there I found behold,
Who can discern the tinsel from the gold. Dryden.

If the man will too curiously examine the superficial tinsel good, he undecives himself to his own cost. Norrie.

No glittering tinsel of May-fair
Could with this rod of sad compute. Swift.

Ye tinsel insects, whom a court maintains,
That count your beauties only by your fumes,
Spin all your cobwebs o'er the eyes of day,
The muse's wing shall brush you all away. Pope.

To TINSEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

To decorate with cheap ornaments; to adorn with lustre that has no value.

Hence, you phantastick polishers in tongue,
My text defeats your art, his Nature's tongue,
Scorns all her tinsel'd metaphors of pelt.
Illustrated by nothing but he left. Cleaveland.

She, tinsel'd o'er in robes of varying hues,
With self-apparell her wild creation views,
Sees innumerable monsters rise and fall,
And with her own soul's colours gilds them all. Pope.

TINT. n. f. [teinte, French; tinta, Ital.]

A die; a colour.

Whether thy hand strike out some free design,
Where life awakes, and dawns at every line;
Or blend in hazardous tint the colour'd mists,
And from the canvas call the mimic tree. Pope.

The virtues of most men will only blow,
Like epy auricles, in Alpin snow;
Transplant them to the equinoctial line,
Their vigor lessens, and their tints decline. Marten.

Though it be allowed that elaborate harmony of colouring, a brilliancy of tint, is not to the eye what an harmonious concert of music does to the ear; it will be remembered, that painting is not merely a gratification of sight. Reynolds.

TIP

TIPPOW. n. f. An insult.

TIPY. adj. [tint, tyn, Danish.] Little;

small; puny. A barlesque word.

Any pretty little tiny kickshaw. Shakespeare.

When that I was a little tiny boy,

A foolish thing was but a toy. Shakespeare.

But ah! I fear thy little fancy roves

On little females, and on little loves;

Thy puny children, and thy tiny spouse.

The baby playthings that adorn thy house. Swift.

TIP. n. f. [tip, tipken, Dutch.] Top;

end; point; extremity.

The tip no jewel needs to wear.

The tip is jewel of the ear.

they touch the beard with the tip of their tongue, and wet it. Sidney.

I trace upon thy finger's tip.

Thrice up a thy rubied lip.

All the pleasure dwells upon the tip of his tongue. Milton.

South.

She has fifty private amours, which nobody yet knows any thing of but her self, and thirty clandestine marriages, that have not been touched by the tip of the tongue. Addison.

I no longer look upon lord Plausible as ridiculous, for, admiring a lady's fine tip of an ear and pretty elbow. Pope.

To TIP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To top; to end; to cover on the end.

In his hand a reed

Stood waving, tip'd with fire. Milton.

With truncheon tip'd with iron head,

The warrior to the lists he led. Hudibras.

How would the old king smile

To see you weigh the paws, when tip'd with gold,

And throw the baggy spoils about your shoulders? Addison.

Quarto's, octavo's shape the less'ning pyre,

And last a little Ajax tips the pyre. Pope.

Behold the place, where if a poet

Shin'd in description, he might show it;

Tell how the moon beam trembled falls,

And tips with silver all the walls. Pope.

Tip with jet,

Fair ermine spots as the snows they press. Thomson.

2. To strike slightly; to tap.

She writes love-letters to the youth in grace,

Nay, tips the wink before the cuckold's face. Dryden.

The port jacksnapes t'p'd me the wink, and put out his tongue at his grandfather. Tatter.

A third rogue tips me by the elbow.

Their judgment was, upon the whole,

that he is the dullest fool.

Then tip their forehead in a jeer,

As who should say, he wants it here. Swift.

When I saw the keeper trown,

Tip him with half a crown,

Nay, said I, we are alone,

Name your horses one by one. Swift.

TIPPER. n. f. [tap et, Saxon.] Something worn about the neck.

His carban was white, with a small red cross on the top he had also a tipper of fine linnen. Bacon.

To TIPPLE. v. n. [tepel, a dug, old Tentonick.] To drink luxuriously; to waste life over the cup.

I let us grant it not amiss to sit,

And keep the turn of t'ppling with a slave,

To reel the streets at noon. Shakespeare.

To TIPPLE. v. a. To drink in luxury or excess.

While his cowering drone-pipe scann'd

The myrtle figures of her hand,

He tips her pamper'd soul and dunes.

On all her torments telling times. Cleaveland.

To a short meal he makes a tedious grace,

Before the barley-quidding comes to place;

Then bids fall on; in haste for fasting on urges

A peck'd field on our ears, and tipplers verjuice. Dryden.

If a slumber haply does invade

My weedy limbs, my fancy's still awake.

Then, hush of drink, and eager, in a dream,

Tipple's lawgiving pots of ale. Philips.

TIPPLE. n. s. [from the verb.] Drink; liquor.

While the tipple was paid for, all went merrily on. L'Estrange.

TIPPLED. adj. [from tipple.] Tipfy; drunk.

Alorry, we sail from the east,
Half tipped at a rainbow feast. Dryden.

TIPPLED. n. s. [from tipple.] A sottish drunkard; an idle drunken fellow.

TIPSTAFF. n. s. [tip and staff.]

1. An officer with a staff tipped with metal.

2. The staff itself.

One had in his hand a tipstaff of a yellow cane, tipped at both ends with blue. Beacon.

TIPSY. adj. [from tipple.] Drunk; overpowered with excess of drink.

The riot of the tipsy bacchanals,
Tearing the Thracian singer in their rage. Shaksp.

Midnight shout and revelry, Topsy dance and jollity. Milton.

TIPTOE. n. s. [tip and toe.] The end of the toe.

Where the fond ape himself appearing high,
Upon his tip-toes stalketh daintily by. Spenser.

He that outlives this day, and comes safe home,
Will stand a tip-toe when this day is nam'd.

And rouse him at the name of Crispian. Shaksp.

Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day Stands tip-toe on the misty mountains tops. Shaksp.

Religion stands on tip-toe in our land,
Ready to pass to the American brand. Herbert.

Ten ruddy wildings in the wood I found,
And stood on tip-toes from the ground. Dryden.

TIRE. n. s. [tyr, Dutch.]

1. Rank; row. Sometimes written tier.

Your lowest tier of ordnance must lie four foot clear above water, when all loading is in, or else those your best pieces will be of small use at sea,
in any grown weather that makes the billows to rise.

Stood rank'd of seraphim another row,
In posture to displode their second tier
Of thunder. Milton.

In all those wars there were few tirems, most of them being of one size of ours of fifty banks. Arbuthnot.

2. [Corrupted from tiar or tiara, or from attire.] A headdress.

On her head she wore a tiar of gold,
Adorn'd with gems and onches. Spenser.

Here is her picture: let me see;
If I had such a tiar, this face of mine
Were full as lovely as is this of hers. Shaksp.

The judge of torments, and the king of tears,
Now sits a burnish'd throne of quenchless fire,
And for his old fair robes of light he wears
A gloomy mantle of dark blood; the tiar
That crowns his hated head, on high appears.

When the fury took her stand on high,
A hiss from all the dusky tiar went round. Pope.

3. Furniture; apparatus.

Saint George's worth
Enkindles like desire of high exploits:
Immediate sieges, and the fire of war
Rue in thy eager mind. Philips.

When they first peep forth of the ground, they show their whole tiar of leaves, then flowers, next seeds. Woodward.

TO TIRE. v. a. [tiran, Saxon.]

1. To fatigue; to make weary; to harass;
to wear out with labour or tediousness.

Tir'd with toil, all hopes of safety past,
From pray'rs to wishes he descends at last. Dryden.

For this a hundred voices I desire,
To tell thee what a hundred tongues would tire;
Yet never could be worthily express'd,
How deeply thou art seated in my breast. Dryden.

2. It has often out added, to intend the signification.

Often a few that are stiff do tire out a greater number that are more moderate. Beacon.

A lonely way
The obscured Albion wander'd half a day;
Tir'd out, at length a spreading stream he spy'd. Ticket.

3. [from attire or tire, from tiara.] To dress the head.

Jemmel painted her face, and tired her head. 2 Kings.

TO TIRE. v. n. [tiran, Saxon.] To fail with weariness.

TIREDNES. n. s. [from tired.] State of being tired; weariness.

It is not through the tiredness of the age of the earth, but through our own negligence, that it hath not satisfied us bountifully. Hakenill.

TIREDSOM. adj. [from tire.] Wearisome; fatiguing; tedious.

Since the incubating precept upon precept will prove tiresome to the reader, the poet must sometimes relieve the subject with a pleasant and pertinent digression. Addison.

Nothing is so tiresome as the works of those critics who write in a dogmatick way, without language, genius, or imagination. Addison.

TIREDSOMENESS. n. s. [from tiresome.] Aft or quality of being tiresome.

TIREWOMAN. n. s. [tire and woman.] A woman whose business is to make dresses for the head.

Why should they not value themselves for this outside fashionableness of the tirewomen's making, when their parents have so early instructed them to do so. Locke.

TIRINGHOUSE. } n. s. [tire and house, or TIRINGROOM. } room.] The room in which players dress for the stage.

This green plot shall be our stage, this hawthorn brake our tiringhouse. Shaksp.

Man's life's a tragedy; his mother's womb,
From which he enters, is the tiringroom;
This spacious earth the theatre, and the stage
That country which he lives in; passions, rage,
Folly, and vice, are actors. Wotton.

TIRWIT. n. s. [vanellus, Latin.] A bird. Ainsworth.

TIS. Contracted for it is.

'Tis destiny unshunnable. Shaksp.

TIRICAL. adj. [for phthysical.] Consumptive.

TIRICK. n. s. [corrupted from phthick.] Consumption; morbid waste.

TIRISSUE. n. s. [tissue, French; tiran, to weave, Norman Saxon.] Cloth interwoven with gold or silver, or figured colours.

In their glittering tissues emblaz'd
Holy memorials, acts of zeal and love, Recorded eminent. Milton.

A robe of tissue, stiff with golden wire;
An upper vest, once Helen's rich attire;
From Argos by the sea'd adulteress brought,
With golden flow'rs and winding foliage wrought. Dryden.

TO TIRISSUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To interweave; to variegate.

The chariot was covered with cloth of gold tissued upon blue. Beacon.

They have been always frank of their blessings to countenance any great action; and then, according as it should prosper, to tissue upon it fine pretence or other. Wotton.

Mercy will fit between,
Thron'd in celestiall sheen,
With radiant feet the tissued clouds down steering. Milton.

TIT. n. s.

1. A small horse: generally in contempt.

No stiring of pasture with baggagely tit,
With ragged, with aged, and evil at hit. Tusser.

Thou might'st have taken example
From what thou read'st in story;
Being as worthy to sit
On an embling tit.

As thy predecessor Dury. Donham.

2. A woman: in contempt.

What does this unlovely tit, but away to her father with a tale? L'Estrange.

A willing tit that will venture her corps with you. Dryden.

Short pains for thee, for me a son and heir,
Girls cost as many throes in bringing forth;
Beside, when born, the tit are little worth. Dryden.

3. A tirmouse or tomtit. [parus, Latin.] A bird.

TITBIT. n. s. [properly tidbit; tid, tender, and bit.] Nice bit; nice food.

John pamper'd esquire South with titbits till he grew wanton. Arbuthnot.

TITHE. n. s. [teoða, Saxon, tenth.]

1. The tenth part; the part assigned to the maintenance of the ministry.

Many have made witty invectives against usury: they say, that it is a pity the devil should have God's part, which is the tithe. Bacon.

Sometimes comes she with a tithe pig's tail,
Tickling the parson as he lies asleep,
Then dreams he of another benefice. Shaksp.

2. The tenth part of any thing.

I have searched man by man, boy by boy; the tithe of a hair was never lost in my house before. Shaksp.

Since the first sword was drawn about this question,
Ev'ry tithe soul 'mongst many thousand dimes
Hath been as dear as Heben. Shaksp.

3. Small part; small portion, unless it be misprinted for tithes.

Offensive wars for religion are seldom to be approved, unless they have some mixture of civil tithes. Bacon.

TO TITHE. v. a. [teoðian, Saxon.] To tax; to levy the tenth part.

When I come to the tithing of them, I will tithe them one with another, and will make an *tithe*man the tithingman. Spenser.

By decimation and a tithed death,
If thy revenges hunger for that food
Which nature loathes, take thou the destin'd tenth. Shaksp.

When thou hast made an end of tithing all the tithes of thine increase, the third year, the year of tithing, give unto the Levite, stranger, fatherless, and widow. Deuteronomy.

TO TITHE. v. n. To pay tithe.

For lamb, pig, and calf, and for other the like,
Tithe to as thy cattle the lord do not strike. Tusser.

TITHEABLE. adj. [from tithe.] Subject to the payment of tithes; that of which tithes may be taken.

The popish priest shall, on taking the oath of allegiance to his majesty, be entitled to a tenth part or tithe of all things tithable in Ireland belonging to the papists, within their respective parishes. Swift.

TITHER. n. s. [from tithe.] One who gathers tithes.

TITHING. n. s. [tithinga, law Latin, from tithe.]

1. Tithing is the number or company of ten men with their families knit together in a society, all of them being bound to the king for the peaceable and good behaviour of each of their society: of these companies there was one chief person, who, from his office, was called (toothingman) tithingman; but now he is nothing but a constable.

Though vicar be bad, or the parson be evil,
Go not for thy tithing thyself to the devil. Tusser.

TITHINGMAN. n. s. [tithing and man.] A petty peaceofficer; an under constable.

His bonded is not at his command further than his prince's service; and all every tithingman may controul him. Spenser.

TITMAL. n. f. [titmallo, French; titmallo, Lat.] An herb. Ainsw.
To TITILLATE. v. n. [titillo, Latin.] To tickle.
Just where the breath of life his nostrils drew,
A charge of snuff the wily virgin threw;
The gnomes direct to every atom just
The pungent grains of titillating dust. Pope.
TITILLATION. n. f. [titillation, Fr. titillatio, Lat. from titillare.]
1. The act of tickling.
Tickling causeth laughter; the cause may be the effusion of the spirits, and so of the breath, by a slight from titillation. Bacon.
2. The state of being tickled.
In scents, the acid particles seem so attenuated in the oil, as only to produce a small and grateful titillation. Arbuthnot.
3. Any slight or petty pleasure.
The delights which result from these nobler entertainments, our cool thoughts need not be ashamed of, and which are dogged by no such sad sequels as are the products of those titillations that reach no higher than the senses. Glanville.
TITLARK. n. f. A bird.
The smaller birds do like the like in their seasons; as the levercock, titlark, and linnet. Walton.
TITLE. n. f. [titelle, old Fr. titulus, Lat.]
1. A general head comprising particulars.
Three draw the experiments of the former four into titles and tables for the better drawing of observations; these we call compilers. Bacon.
Among the many preferences that the laws of England have above others, I shall single out two particular titles, which give a handsome specimen of their excellencies above other laws in other parts or titles of the same. Hale.
2. An appellation of honour.
To leave his wife, to leave his babes,
His mansion, and his titles in a place
From whence himself does fly? Shakespeare.
Man over man
He made not lord: such title to himself Refusing. Milton.
3. A name; an appellation.
My name's Macbeth.
—The devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear. Shakespeare.
Ill worthy I such title should belong
To me transgressor. Milton.
4. The first page of a book, telling its name, and generally its subject; an inscription.
This man's brow, like to a title leaf,
Foretels the nature of a tragick volume. Shakespeare.
Our adversaries encourage a writer who cannot furnish out so much as a title page with propriety. Smyth.
Others with wishful eyes on glory look,
When they have got their picture towards a book;
Or pompous title, like a gaudy sign Meant to betray dull fots to wretched wine. Young.
5. A claim of right.
Let the title of a man's right be called in question, are we not bold to rely and build upon the judgment of such as are famous for their skill in the laws? Hawker.
Is a man impoverished by purchase? it is because he paid his money for a lye, and took a bad title for a good. South.
Tis our duty
Such monuments, as we can build, to raise;
Let all the world prevent what we should do,
And claim a title in him by their praise. Dryden.
If there were no laws to protect them, there were no living in this world for good men; and in effect there would be no laws, if it were a sin in them to try a title, or right themselves by them. Kebleworth.
To revenge their common injuries, though you had an undoubted title by your birth, you had a greater by your courage. Dryden.
Coud would have kept his title to Orange. Adams.
O the discretion of a girl! she will be a slave to any thing that has not a title to make her one. Southern.

To TITL. v. e. [from the noun.] To entitle; to name; to call.
To these, that sober race of men, whose lives
Religious titled them the sons of God,
Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame,
Ignobly! Milton.
TITLELESS. adj. [from title.] Wanting a name or appellation. Not in use.
He was a kind of nothing, titleless.
Till he had forg'd himself a name o' th' fire
Of burning Rome. Shakespeare.
We should have been pleased to have seen our own names at the bottom of the titlepage. Dryden.
TITMOUSE or TIT. n. f. [tyt, Dutch, a chick, or small bird; titmugger, Hollandic, a little bird; tit signifies little in the Teutonic dialect.] A small species of birds.
The nightingale is sovereign of song,
Before him fits the titmouse silent by,
And I unfit to thrust in skulld throng,
Should Colin make judge of my foolerie. Spenser.
The titmouse and the pecker's hungry blood,
And Progne with her bottom flamm'd in blood. Dryden.
To TITTER. v. n. [formed, I suppose, from the sound.] To laugh with restraint; to laugh without much noise.
In flow'd at once a gay embroider'd race,
And tittering push'd the pedants off the place. Pope.
TITTER. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A restrained laugh.
2. I know not what it signifies in Tusser.
From wheat go and rake out the titters or tunc,
If eare be not forth, it will rise againe fine. Tusser.
TITTLE. n. f. [I suppose from tit.] A small particle; a point; a dot.
In the particular which concerned the church, the Scots would never depart from a tittle. Clarendon.
Angels themselves did stand
T' approach thy temple, give thee in command
What to the smallest tittle thou shalt say
To thy adorers. Milton.
They thought God and themselves linked in so fast a covenant, that, although they never performed their part, God was yet bound to make good every tittle of his. South.

TO'LERANCE. n. f. [tolerantia, Latin; tolerance, French.] Power of enduring; act of enduring. Not used, though a good word.

Diogenes one frosty morning came into the market-place shaking, to shew his tolerance; many of the people came about him, pitying him. Plato passing by, and knowing he did it to be free, said, If you pity him indeed, let him alone to himself. Bacon.

There wants nothing but consideration of our own eternal weal, a tolerance or endurance of being made happy here, and blessed eternally. Hammond.

To TOLERATE. v. a. [tolero, Latin; tolerer, French.] To allow for as not to hinder; to suffer; to pass uncensured.

Inasmuch as they did resolve to remove only such things of that kind as the church might best spare, retaining the residue, their whole counsel is, in this point, utterly condemned, as having either proceeded from the blindness of those times, or from negligence, or from desire of honour and glory, or from an erroneous opinion that such things might be tolerated for a while. Hooker.

We shall tolerate flying horses, harpies, and infatigables; for these are poetical fancies, whose shaded moralities requite their substantial falsities. Brown.

Men should not tolerate themselves one minute in any known sin. Decay of Piety.

Crying should not be tolerated in children. Locke.

We are fully convinced that we shall always tolerate them, but not that they will tolerate us. Swift.

TOLERATION. n. f. [tolero, Lat.] Allowance given to that which is not approved.

I shall not speak against the indulgence and toleration granted to their men. South.

TOLL. n. f. [This word seems derived from tollo, Latin; toll, Saxon; tol, Dut. told, Danish; toll, Welsh; taille, Fr.] An excise of goods; a seizure of some part for permission of the rest.

Toll, in law, has two significations: first, a liberty to buy and sell within the precincts of a manor, which seems to import as much as a fair or market; secondly, a tribute or custom paid for passage. Cowell.

Emption and Undley the people esteemed as his horse-leeches, bold men, that took toll of their master's grief. Bacon.

The Empress Prusias joined with the Rhodians against the Byzantines, and stopped them from levying the toll upon their trade into the Euxine. Arbuthnot.

To TOLL. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To pay toll or tallage.

I will buy me a son-in-law in a fair, and toll for him: for this, I'll none of him. Shakespeare.

Where, when, by whom, and what y' were told for.

And in the open market toll'd for? Hadibras.

2. To take toll or tallage.

The meale the more yieldeth, if servant be true, And miller that tollith takes none but his due. Tusser.

3. [I know not whence derived.] To sound as a single bell.

The first bringer of unwelcome news Hath but a losing office; and his tongue Sounds ever after as a fallen bell.

Remember'd tolling a departed friend Shakespeare.

Our going to church at the tolling of a bell, only tells us the time when we ought to go to worship God. Stillingfleet.

Toll, toll, Gentle bell, for the soul Of the pure ones. Denham.

You love to hear of some prodigious tale,

The bell that toll'd alone, or Irish whistle Dryden.

They give their bodies due repose at night;

When hollow murmurs of their evening bells

Disturb the sleepy swains, and tell them to their crails. Dryden.

With horns and trumpets now to madness swell,

Now sink in sorrows with a tolling bell. Pope.

To TOLL. v. a. [tollo, Latin.]

1. To ring a bell.

When any one dies, then by tolling or ringing of a bell the same is known to the hearers. Grant.

2. To take away; to vacate; to annul. A term only used in the civil law: in this sense the o is short, in the former long.

An appeal from sentence of excommunication does not suspend it, but then devolves it to a superior judge, and tolls the presumption in favour of a sentence. Ayliffe.

3. To take away, or perhaps to invite. Obsolete.

The adventitious moisture which hangeth loose in a body, betrayeth and tolleth forth the innate and radical moisture along with it. Bacon.

To TOLLBOOTH. n. f. [toll and booth.] A prison. Ainsworth.

To TOLLBOOTH. v. a. To imprison in a tollbooth.

To these what did he give? why a hen,

That they might tollbooth Oxford men. Bp. Corbet.

TOLLGATHERER. n. f. [toll and gather.]

The officer that takes toll.

To TOLSEY. n. f. The same with tollbooth. Diſc.

TOLUTATION. n. f. [toluto, Latin.] The act of pacing or ambling.

They move per latra, that is, two legs of one side together, which is tolutation or ambling. Brown.

They rode; but authors having not determin'd whether pace or trot, That is to say, whether tolutation, As the v do term't, or succussion, We leave it. Hadibras.

TOMB. n. f. [tombe, tombeau, Fr. tumba, low Latin.] A monument in which the dead are enclosed.

Methinks, I see thee, now thou art below,

As one dead in the bottom of a tomb. Shakespeare.

Time is drawn upon tombs an old man bald,

winged, with a sife and an hour-glass. Peacham.

Poor heart! the numbers in her silent tomb;

Let her possess in peace that narrow room. Dryden.

The secret wound with which I bled

Shall lie wrapt up, ev'n in my hearse;

But on my tomb-stone thou shalt read

My answer to thy dubious verse. Prior.

To TOMB. v. a. [from the noun.] To bury; to entomb.

Souls of boys were there,

And youths that tomb'd before their parents were. May.

To MMBLES. adj. [from tomb.] Wanting a tomb; wanting a sepulchral monument.

Lay these bones in an unworthy urn,

Tombless, with no remembrance over them. Shakespeare.

To MBOY. n. f. [Tom, a diminutive of Thomas, and boy.] A mean fellow; sometimes a wild coarse girl.

A lady

Faſten'd to an empery, to be partner'd

With tomboys, lov'd with that self exhibition

Which your own coffers yield! Shakespeare.

TOME. n. f. [French; tomé.]

1. One volume of many.

2. A book.

All those venerable books of scripture, all those sacred tomes and volumes of holy writ, are with such absolute perfection framed. Hooker.

TOMTIT. n. f. [See TITMOUSE.] A titmouse; a small bird.

You would fancy him a giant when you looked upon him, and a tomtit when you shut your eyes. Spectator.

TON. n. f. [tonne, French. See TUN.]

A measure or weight.

Spain was very weak at home, or very slow to move, when they suffered a small fleet of English to fire, sink, and carry away, ten thousand ten of their great shipping. Bacon.

TON, TUN, in the names of places, are derived from the Saxon, ton, a hedge or wall; and this seems to be from burn, a hill, the towns being anciently built on hills, for the sake of defence and protection in times of war. Gibson's Camden.

TON. n. f. [ton, French; tonus, Latin.]

1. Note; sound.

Sounds called tones are ever equal. Bacon.

The strength of a voice or sound makes a difference in the loudness or softness, but not in the tone. Bacon.

In their motions harmony divine

So smooths her charming tones, that God's own ear

Litens delighted. Milton.

2. Accent; sound of the voice.

Palamon replies,

Eager his tone, and ardent wore his eyes. Dryden.

Each has a little soul he calls his own,

And each enunciates with a human tone. Harte.

3. A whine; a mournful cry.

Made children, with your tones, to run for't,

As had as bloody-bones, or Lunsford. Hadibras.

4. A particular or affected sound in speaking.

5. Elasticity; power of extension and contraction.

Drinking too great quantities of this decoction,

may weaken the tone of the stomach. Arbuthnot.

TONO. n. f. [See TONGS.] The catch of a buckle. This word is usually written tongue; but, as its office is to hold, it has probably the same original with tongs, and should therefore have the same orthography.

Their hilts were burnish'd gold, and handle strong,

Of mother pearl, and buckled with a golden tong. Spenser.

TONGS. n. f. [tanx, Saxon; tang, Dut.]

An instrument by which hold is taken of any thing; as of coals in the fire.

Another did the dying brands repair

With iron tongs, and sprinkled oft the flame

With liquid waves. Spenser.

They turn the glowing mass with crooked tongs,

The fiery work proceeds. Dryden.

Get a pair of tongs like a smith's tongs, stronger,

And toothed. Mortimer.

TONGUE. n. f. [tanx, Saxon; tonghe,

Dutch.]

1. The instrument of speech in human beings.

My conscience hath a thousand several tongues,

And every tongue brings in a several tale,

And every tale condemns me for a villain. Shakespeare.

Who with the tongue of angels can relate?

They are tongue-valiant and as bold as I; Shakespeare.

where there's no danger. Shakespeare.

My ears still ring with noise; I'm vex'd to find

Tongue-kill'd, and have not yet recover'd breath. Dryden.

Tongue-valiant hero, vaunter of thy might,

In threats the foremost; but the lag in fight. Shakespeare.

There have been female Pythagoreans, not dis-standing that philosophy consisted in keeping a secret, and the discipline was to hold her tongue two years together. Adams.

Though they have those sounds ready at their tongue's end, yet there are no determined ideas. Locke.

I should make but a poor pretence to true learning,

if I had not clear ideas under the words my tongue could pronounce. Watts.

2. The organ by which animals lick.

They hiss for his return'd, with forked tongue. Milton.

To forked tongue.

3. Speech; fluency of words.

He said; and silence all their tongues contain'd. Chapman.

Much tongue and much judgment seldom go together; for talking and thinking are two quite different faculties. Jefferson.

First in the council hall to steer the state,

And ever foremost in a tongue debate. Dryden.

4. Power of articulate utterance.

Parrots, imitating human tongue, Dryden.

And singing-birds in silver cages hung.

Speech, as well or ill used.
 (Give me thy hand; I am sorry I beat thee:
 yet, while thou livest, keep a good tongue in thy head. Shakespeare.

So brave a knight was Tydous, of whom a foane is prong. Chapman.

after our sure in martiall deeds, though higher in his tongue. Chapman.

On evil days though fallen and evil tongues.
Milton.

A language.
 The Lord shall bring a nation against thee, whose tongue thou shalt not understand. Deuteronomy.

With wondrous gifts endu'd,
 to speak all tongues, and do all miracles. Milton.

So well he understood the most and best
 Of tongue that Ebel sent into the west;
 spoke them so truly, that he had, you'd swear,
 Not only liv'd, but been born ev'ry where. Cowley.

An acquaintance with the various tongues is nothing but a relief against the mischiefs which the building of Babel introduced. Watts.

Speech, as opposed to thoughts or action.
 Let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth. 1 John.

A nation distinguished by their language.
 A scriptural term.

The Lord shall destroy the tongue of the Egyptian sea. Isaiah.

A small point: as, the tongue of a ballance.

10. To hold the TONGUE. To be silent.
 'Tis seldom seen that tenors so young know when to speak, and when to hold their tongue.
Dryden.

Whilst I live I must not hold my tongue,
 And languish out old age in his disciplesure. Addison.

To TONGUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To chide; to scold.

But that her tender shame
 Will not proclaim against her maiden loss,
 How might the tongue me! Shakespeare.

 sing unto that which physicians, from Galen, do name extensive or tonic. Brown.

2. Relating to tones or sounds.

TONNAGE. n. f. [from ton.] A custom or impost due for merchandize brought or carried in tons from or to other nations, after a certain rate in every ton. Cowell.

Tonnage and poundage upon merchandizes were collected, refused to be settled by act of parliament. Clarendon.

TONSIL. n. f. [tonsille, French; tonsilla,
 Latin.]

Tonsils or almonds are two round glands placed on the sides of the basis of the tongue, under the common membrane of the fauces, with which they are covered; each of them hath a large oval sinus, which opens into the fauces, and in it there are a great number of lesser ones, which discharge themselves through the great sinus, of a mucous and slippery matter, into the fauces, larynx, and oesophagus, for the moistening and lubricating these parts. Quincy.

TOSSURE. n. f. [tonsure, French; tonsura, Latin.] The act of clipping the hair;

the state of being shorn.

The vestals, after having received the tonsure, suffered their hair to come again, being here full grown, and gathered under the veil. Addison.

TOO. adv. [to, Saxon.]

1. Over and above; overmuch; more than enough. It is used to augment the sig-nification of an adjective or adverb to a vicious degree.

Your father's rough and stern,
 His will too strong to bend, too proud to learn. Cowley.

Groundless prejudices and weaknesses of conscience, instead of tenderities, instead too many others, too many, otherwise good men. Spenser.

It is too much to build a doctrine of so mighty consequence upon so obscure a place of scripture. Locke.

These ridiculous stories abide with us too long,
 and too far influence the weaker part of mankind. Watts.

2. It is sometimes doubled to increase its emphasis; but this reduplication always seems harsh, and is therefore laid aside.

Oh, that this too too solid flesh would melt!
Shakespeare.

Sometimes it would be full, and then
 Oh! too soon decreate again;
 Eclips'd sometimes, that would so fall,
 There would appear no hope at all. Suckling.

3. Likewise; also.

See what a tongue is laid upon your hate;
 And I, for winking at your discords too,
 Have lost a brace of kinsmen. Shakespeare.

Let on my cup no wars be found,
 Let those incite to quarrels too,
 Which wine itself enough can do. Oldham.

The arriving to such a disposition of mind as shall make a man take pleasure in other men's sins, is evident from the text, and from experience too. South.

It is better than letting our trade fall for want of current pledges, and better too than borrowing money of our neighbours. Locke.

A counter and a patriot too. Pope.

Let those eyes that view
 The daring crime, behold the vengeance too. Pope.

TOOK. The preterit, and sometimes the participle passive, of take.

Thy soldiers,
 All levied in my name, have in my name
 Took their discharge. Shakespeare.

He is God in his friendship as well as in his nature, and therefore we sinful creatures are not took upon advantages, nor consumed in our provocations. South.

Suddenly the thunder-clap Took us unprepared. Dryden.

The same device enclosed the athen of men or boys, maids or matrons; for when the thought took,

though at first it received its rise from flesh, it particular occasion, the ignorance of the sculptors applied it promiscuously. Addison.

Thus took up some of his hours every day. Spock.
 The riders would leap them over my hand; and one of the emperor's huntsmen, upon a large counter, took my foot, shoe and all. Swift.

Leaving Polybus, I took my way To Cyrrha's temple. Pope.

TOOL. n. f. [tol, tool, Saxon.]

1. Any instrument of manual operation.

In mulberries the sap is towards the bark only,
 into which if you cut a little, it will come forth;
 but if you pierce it deeper with a tool, it will be
 dry. Bacon.

They found in many of their mines more gold than earth, and which the Americans not regarding, greedily exchanged for hammers, knives, axes, and the like tools of iron. Heylin.

Arm'd with such gardening tools as art, yet rude,
 Guiltless of fire had form'd. Milton.

The ancients had some secret to harden the edges of their tools. Addison.

2. A hiring; a wretch who acts at the command of another.

He'd choose
 To talk with wits in dirty shoes;
 And scorn the tools with flurs and garters. Swift.

So often seen cressling Chatterbox.

To Toor. v. n. [Of this word, in this sense, I know not the derivation; perhaps totan, Saxon, contracted from toetan, to know or examine.]

1. To pry; to peep; to search narrowly and sily. It is still used in the provinces, otherwise obsolete.

I call to go a shooting,
 Long wand'ring up and down the land,
 With bow and bolts on either hand,
 For birds and bushes tooting. Spenser.

2. It was used in a contemptuous sense, which I do not fully understand.

This writer should wear a tooting horn. Howell.

TOOTH. n. f. plural teeth. tooth, Saxon;
tand, Dutch.]

1. The teeth are the hardest and smoothest bones of the body; about the seventh or eighth month they begin to pierce the edge of the jaw: the dentes incisivi, or fine teeth of the upper jaw, appear first, and then those of the lower jaw; after them come out the canini or eye teeth, and last of all the molars or grinders: about the seventh year they are thrust out by new teeth, and if these teeth be lost they never grow again; but some have shed their teeth twice: about the one-and-twentieth year the two last of the molars spring up, and they are called dentes sa-pientie. Quincy.

Avant, you curs!
 Be thy mouth or black or white,
 Teeth that poison it it bite. Shakespeare.

Defect deferves with characters of beasts
 A forced residence against the tooth of time,
 And azure of oblivion. Shakespeare.

The teeth alone among the bones continue to grow in length during a man's whole life, as appears by the unsightly length of one tooth when its opposite happens to be pulled out. Ray.

2. Taste; palate.

These are not dishes for thy dainty tooth;
 What, hast thou got an ulcer in thy mouth?
 Why stand'st thou picking? Dryden.

3. A tine, prong, or blade, of any multitudinous instrument.

The priest's servant came while the fesh was in seething, with a flesh hook of three teeth. 1 Samuel.

I made an instrument in fashion of a comb, whose teeth being in number sixteen, were about an inch and an half broad, and the intervals of the teeth about two inches wide. Newton.

4. The prominent part of wheels, by which they catch upon correspondent parts of other bodies.

The edge whereon the teeth are is always made thicker than the back, because the back follows the edge. Mozon.

In clocks, though the screws and teeth be never so smooth, yet if they be not oiled will hardly move, though you clog them with never so much weight; but apply a little oil, they whirl about very swiftly with the tenth part of the force. Ray.

5. Tooth and nail. With one's utmost violence; with every means of attack or defence.

A lion and bear were at tooth and nail which should carry off a fawn. L'Estrange.

6. To the TEETH. In open opposition.

It warms the very sickness in my heart, That I shall live and tell him to his teeth, Thus diddest thou. Shakespeare.

The action lies In his true nature, and we ourselves compell'd, Ev'n to the teeth and forehead of our faults, To give in evidence. Shakespeare.

The way to our horses lies back again by the house, and then we shall meet 'em full on the teeth. Dryden.

7. To cast in the TEETH. To insult by open exprobration.

A wife body's part it were not to put out his fire, because his fond and foolish neighbour, from whom he borrowed wherewith to kindle it, might cast him therewith in the teeth, saying, Were it not for me thou wouldst freeze, and not be able to heat thyself. Hooker.

8. In spite of the TEETH. Notwithstanding threats expressed by showing teeth; notwithstanding any power of injury or defence.

The guiltiness of my mind drove the grossness of the sopor into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rumour and reason, that they were fairies. Shakespeare.

The only way is, not to grumble at the lot they must bear in spite of their teeth. L'Estrange.

9. To show the TEETH. To threaten.

When the law shows her teeth, but dares not bite, And South-Sea treasures are not brought to light. Young.

To TOOTH. v. a. [from tooth.]

1. An animal covered with a hard shell:
there are tortoises both of land and water.
In his needy shop a tortoise hung,
An alligator stult.

A living tortoise being turned upon its back, not being able to make use of its paws for the returning of itself, because they could only bend towards the belly, it could help itself only by its neck and head; sometimes one side, sometimes another, by pushing against the ground, to rock itself as in a cradle, to find out where the inequality of the ground might permit it to roll its shell. Ray.

2. A form into which the ancient soldiers used to throw their troops, by bending down, and holding their bucklers above their heads so that no darts could hurt
them.

So vary'd he, and of his tortuous train
Cull'd many a wanton wreath. Milton.

Aqueous vapours, like a dry wind, pass through so long and tortuous a pipe of lead. Boyle.

2. Mischievous. [Thus I explain it, on supposition that it is derived from tort, wrong; but it may mean crooked: as we say, crooked ways for bad practices, crook- ed being regularly enough opposite to right. This in some copies is tortious, and therefore from tort.]

Ne ought he car'd whom he endamaged
By tortuous wrong, or whom bereav'd of right.
Spenser.

TORTURE. n. f. [torture, Fr. tortura,
Latin.]

that gay and pleasing countenance accompanying love. Deham.

TORTV. n. f. [A cant term, derived, I suppose, from an Irish word signifying a savage.] One who adheres to the ancient constitution of the state, and the apostolical hierarchy of the church of England: opposed to a whig.

The knight is more a tory in the country than the town, because it more advances his interest.
Addison.

This protestant zealot, this English divine,
In church and in state was of principles found,
Was truer than steel to the Hammer line,
And griev'd that a tory should live above ground.
Swift.

To confound his hated coin,
All parties and religious join,
Whigs, toies. Swift.

To TOSE. v. u. [of the same original with tease.] To comb wool.

He toft his arm aloft, and proudly told me.
He would not stay. Addison

So talk too idle buzzing things,
Toft up their heads, and stretch their wings.
Prior.

4. To agitate; to put into violent motion.

The getting of treasures by a lying tongue is a vanity tofted to and fro. Proverbs.

Things will have their first or second agitation;
if they be not tofted upon the arguments of counsel, they will be tofted upon the waves of fortune, and be full of inconstancy, doing and undoing. Bacon

Cowls, hoods, and habits, with their wearers toft.
And flatter'd into rage. Milton.

I have made several voyages upon the sea, often been tofted in storms. Spectator.

5. To make restless; to disquiet.

She did love the knight of the red cross,
For whole dear sake to many troubles heft toft.
Spenser.

Calm region once,
And fall of peace, now toft and turbulent. Milton.

6. To keep in play; to tumble over.

he found very weak in bed, continually tofting and tumbling from one side to another, and totally deprived of her rest. Harvey.

To toft and fling, and to be restless, only frets and enrages our pain. Tyllofson.

And thou, my fire, not destin'd by thy birth
To turn to dust and mix with common earth,
How wilt thou toft and rave, and long to die,
And quit thy claim to immortality! Addison.

They throw their person with a hoyden air
Across the room, and toft into the chair. Young.

2. To be tofted.

Your mind is tofting on the sea,
There where you argosies
Do overpeer the petty traffickers. Shakspeare.

3. To TOSS UP. To throw a coin into the air, and wager on what side it shall fall.
I'd try it any pleasure could be found
In tofting up for twenty thousand pound.
Bumpton.

Toss. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of tofting.

The discus that is to be seen in the hand of the celebrated Callist at Don Lisio's is perfectly round; nor has it any thing like a fling falsetted to it, to add force to the toft. Addison.

2. An affected manner of raising the head.

His various modes from various fathers follow;
One taught the toft, and one the new French wallow; His sword-knot this, his cravat that designed.
Dryden.

There is hardly a polite sentence in the following dialogue which doth not require some suitable toft of the head. Swift.

TOSSER. n. f. See TASSER.

The steepest lower corner a handful of hops with a piece of packthread to make a toft, by which you

With one virtuous touch
 Th' arch-chemist's fun produces precious things. Milton.

4. State of being touched.

The time was once, when thou unurg'd wouldst vow,
 That never touch was welcome to thy hand,
 Unless I touch'd. Shakespeare.

5. Examination, as by a stone.

To-morrow, good sir Michell, is a day
 Wherein the fortune of ten thousand men Must bide the touch. Shakespeare.

Ah Buckingham, now do I ply the touch,

To try if thou be current gold indeed. Shakespeare.
 Albert some of these articles were merely devised, yet the duke being of base gold, and fearing the touch, subscribed that he did acknowledge his offences. Huyward.

6. Test; that by which any thing is examined.

The law-makers rather respected their own benefit than equity, the true touch of all laws. Carver.

7. Proof; tried qualities.

Come, my sweet wife, my dearest mother, and
 My friends of noble touch / when I am forth, Bid me farewell, and smile. Shakespeare.

8. [toucher, Fr.] Single act of a pencil upon the picture.

Artificial strife

Lives in those touches, livelier than life. Shakespeare.

It will be the more difficult for him to conceive when he has only a relation given him, without the nice touches which make the graces of the picture. Dryden.

Never give the least touch with your pencil, till you have well examined your design. Dryden.

Thus Rosalind of many parts
 By heav'nly synod was devis'd;
 Of many faces, eyes and hearts,
 To have the touches deusil priz'd. Shakespeare.

A son was copy'd from his voice so much,
 The very same in ev'ry little touch. Dryden.

10. Act of the hand upon a musical instrument.

Here let the sounds of music
 Creep in our ears; soft silken and the night
 Become the touches of sweet harmony. Shakespeare.

Nor wanted power to mitigate and swage,
 With solemn touches, troubled thoughts. Milton.

11. Power of exciting the affections.

Not alone
 The death of Fulvia, with more urgent touches,
 Do strongly speak to us. Shakespeare.

TOUCHING n. f. [from touching.]
As which without our nature could not on earth
But for the world, doth now also, by means thereof, Of both make intercession to God for sinners, and exercise dominion over all men, with a true, natural, and a sensible touch of mercy. Hooker.
He loves us not:
He wants the natural touch. Shakespeare.
TOUCHING adj. [from touch.]
Speech of touch towards others should be sparingly used; for discourse ought to be as a field, with out coming home to any man. Bacon.
TOUCH n. f. [Fr.] A stroke.
Our kings no sooner fall out, but their minds make war upon one another; one meets sometimes with very nice touches of railery. Addison.
Another smart touch of the author we meet with in the fifth page, where, without any preparation, he breaks out all on a sudden into a vein of poetry. Addison.
Though its error may be such,
As knags and Burgles cannot hit,
It yet may feel the nicer touch
Of Wicherley's or Congreve's wit. Prior.
He gave the little wealth he had
To build a house for fools and mad;
To show by one satirick touch,
No nation wanted it so much. Swift.
TOUCH n. f. [Fr.] A stroke.
I never bare any touch of conscience with greater regret. King Charles.
Soon mov'd with touch of blame, thus Eve,
What words have pass'd thy lips, Adam, severe! Milton.
TOUCH n. f. [Fr.] A stroke.
Touch kept is commended, yet credit to keep
Is pay and dispatch him, yet ever so sleeper. Tupper.
Quoth Hudibras, thou offer'st much,
But art not able to keep touch. Hudibras.
I keep touch both with my promise to Philopoy, and with my own usual frugality in these kind of collations. Morgan.
He was not to expect that so perfidious a creature should keep touch with him. L'Estrange.
TOUCH n. f. [Fr.] A stroke.
Madam, I have a touch of your condition,
That cannot brook the accent of reproof. Shakespeare.
This coming still nearer to an aspiration, a touch of it may perhaps be an ingredient in the rough guttural pronunciation of the Welsh and Irish. Holder.
TOUCH n. f. [Fr.] A stroke.
The king your master knows their disposition very well; a small touch will put him in mind of them. Bacon.
TOUCH n. f. [Fr.] A stroke.
Print my preface in such a form as, in the bookseller's phrase, will make a fixtury touch. Swift.
TOUCHABLE adj. [from touch.] Tangible; that may be touched.
TOUCH-HOLE n. f. [touch and hole.] The hole through which the fire is conveyed to the powder in the gun.
In a piece of ordnance, if you speak in the touch-hole, and another lay his ear to the mouth of the piece, the sound is far better heard than in the open air. Bacon.
TOUCHINESS n. f. [from touching.] Previncence; irascibility.
My friends resented it as a motion not guided with such discretion as the touchings of those times required. King Charles.
TOUCHING prep. [This word is originally a participle of touch.] With respect, regard, or relation to. It has often the particle as before it, of which there seems to be no use. Touching is now obsolete though more concise than the mode of speech now adopted.
Touching things which belong to discipline, the church hath authority to make canons and decrees, even as we read in the apostles times it did. Hooker.

TOUCHING verb. [from touch.]
Touching our person, seek we no revenge;
But we our kingdom's safety must so tender,
Whole ruin you three sought, that to her jaws
We do deliver you. Shakespeare.
The heavens and the earth remained in the same state in which they were created, as touching their substance, though there was afterwards added multiplicity of perfection in respect of beauty.
Raleigh.
Touching the debt, he took himself to be acquainted therewith.
Socrates chose rather to die, than renounce or conceal his judgment touching the unity of the Godhead. South.
TOUCHING adj. [from touch.] Pathettick; affecting; moving.
TOUCHINGLY adv. [from touch.] With feeling emotion; in a pathetick manner.
This last fable shows how touchingly the poet argues in love affairs. Garr.
TOUCHMENOT n. f. [cucumis agrchis, Lat.]
An herb. Ainsworth.
TOUCHSTONE n. f. [touch and stone; pierre de touche, Fr.]
1. Stone by which metals are examined.
Chilon would say, that gold was tried with the touchstone, and men with gold. Bacon.
If he intends to deal clearly, why does he not try the touchstone faulty, and the standard uncertain? Collier.
2. Any test or criterion.
Is not this their rule of such sufficiency, that we should use it as a touchstone to try the orders of the church? Hooker.
The work the touchstone of the nature is;
And by their operations things are known.
Money serves for the touchstone of common honesty. L'Estrange.
Time is the surest judge of truth. I am not vain enough to think I have left no truths in this, which that touchstone will not discover. Dryden.
TOUCHWOOD n. f. [touch and wood.]
Rotten wood used to catch the fire struck from the flint.
A race of retolent stout trees they are, so abounding with metal and heat, that they quickly take fire, and become touchwood. Howell.
To make white powder, the powder of rotten willows is best; gunk, or touchwood prepared, might make it ruder. Brown.
TOUCHY adj. [from touch.] Peevish;
irritable; irascible; apt to take fire.
A low word.
You are upon a touchy point, and therefore treat of a subject with proportionable caution. Collier.
You are to touchy, and take things too badly, I am sure there must be some mistake in this. Arbutnot.
TOUGH adj. [tah, Sax.]
1. Yielding to flexure or extension without fracture; not brittle.
Of bodies some are fragile, and some are tough,
and not fragile. Bacon.
2. Stiff; not easily flexible.
The bow he drew,
And almost join'd the horns of the tough engh. Dryden.
Fate with nature's law would strive,
To show plain-dealing once an age may thrive,
And when to tough a frame he could not bend,
Exceeded her commission to befriend. Dryden.
3. Not easily injured or broken.
O fides, you are too tough!
Will you yet hold?
A body made of brass the crane demands
For her lov'd nursing, strong with nerves of wire, Tough to the last, and with no toil to tire. Dryden.
4. Viscous; clammy; rosy; tenacious.
TOUGHEN v. n. [from tough.] To grow tough.
Hops off the kiln lay three weeks to cool, give and toughen, else they will break to powder. Mortimer.
TOUGHEN v. a. To make tough.

TOUGHNESS n. f. [from tough.]
1. Not brittleness; flexibility.
To make an induration with toughness, and loss fragility, delect bodies in water for three days;
but they must be such into which the water will not enter. Bacon.
A well-temper'd sword is bent at will,
But keeps the native toughness of the steel. Dryden.
2. Viscosity; tenacity; clamminess; glutinousness.
In the first stage the viscosity or toughness of the fluids should be taken off by diluents. Arbutnot.
3. Firmness against injury.
I confess me knit to thy deserving with cables of perdurable toughness. Shakespeare.
TOUPEE n. f. [Fr.] A curl an artificial lock of hair.
Remember second-hand toupees and repaired ruffles. Swift.
TOUR n. f. [tour, Fr.]
1. Ramble; moving journey.
I made the tour of all the king's palaces. Addison.
Were it permitted, he'd make the tour of the whole system of the sun. Arbutnot and Page.
2. Turn; revolution. In both these senses it is rather French than English.
First Ptolemy his scheme collected wrought,
And of machines a wild provision brought;
Ours centrick and eccentric he prepares,
Cycles and epicycles, solid spheres
In order plac'd, and with bright globes inlaid,
To solve the tours by heavenly bodies made. Blackmore.
3. In Milton it is probably tower; elevation; high flight.
The bird of Jove stoop'd from his airy tour,
Two birds of gayest plume before him drove. Milton.
TOURNAMENT n. f. [tournamentum, TOURNAY, } low Latin.]
1. Tilt; joust; military sport; mock encounter.
They might, under the pretence
Of tilts and tournaments,
Provide them horse and armour for defence. Daniel.
For jousts, tournaments, and barriers, the glories of them are the chariots wherein challengers make their entry. Bacon.
Whence came all those jousts, tilings, and tournaments, so much in vogue in these parts? Temple.
He liv'd with all the pomp he could devise,
At tilts and tournaments obtain'd the prize,
But found no treasure in his lady's eyes. Dryden.
2. Milton uses it simply for encounter;
fleet of battle.
With cruel tournament the squadrons join;
Where cattle pass'd late, now scatter'd lies
With carcasses, and arms, th' intangled field. Milton.
TOURNAY v. n. [from the noun.] To tilt in the tilts.
An elin born of noble state,
Well could he tourney, and in tilts debate. Spenser.
TOURNIQUET n. f. [Fr.] A bandage used in amputations, straitened or relaxed
by the turn of a handle.
If the orifice does not readily appear, loosen the tourniquet, and the effusion of blood will direct you to it. Shelf.
TOUZE v. a. [probably of the same original with taw, tawse, tase.] To pull;
to tear; to haul; to drag; whence toyer,
or tozer, the name of a man's.
As a bear whom angry cubs have touch'd,
Having oil shak'd them and clasp'd their hands,
Becomes more fell, not all that time with fangs
Treads down and overthrows. Spenser.
She tosses, tumbles, strikes, turns, touzes, spurs,
and spralls,
Casting with twining limbs her holders to the wall. Drayton.

TOW

Take him hence; to th' deck with him: we'll toss you joint by joint, but we will know his purpose. Shakespeare.

To tower such things as flatter,
To honest Bounce is bread and butter. Swift.

Tow, n. f. [top, Saxon.] Flax or hemp beaten and combed into a filamentous
substance.

Tow twisted round the handle of an instrument makes it easier to be held. Sharp.

To Tow, v. a. [teon, teohan, Saxon, to lead; toghen, old Dutch.] To draw by a rope, particularly through the water.

Thou knew'st too well
My heart was to thy rudder ty'd by th' firing,
And thou should'st tow me after. Shakespeare.

The tempest towed, and I floated, till we arrived. Swift.

toward him.

4. With respect to; touching; regarding.
We brought them to a great peace between themselves, as love towards us for having made the peace. Sidney.

Repent you not,
As that the sin hath brought you to this shame,
Which sorrow's always tow'ards ourselves, not heaven? Shakespeare.

His heart relented towards her. Milton.
By our law, no good is to be left undone towards all, not the good of the tongue, the hand, the heart. South.

5. With ideal tendency to.
This was the first alarm England received towards any trouble, after it had enjoyed for many years
the most uninterrupted prosperity. Clarendon.

6. Nearly; little less than.
I am towards nine years older since I left you. Swift.

To'ward. } adv. [It is doubtful whether To'wards. } in this use the word be adverb or adjective.] Near; at hand;
in a state of preparation.

What might be toward, that this sweaty haste
Doth make the night joint labourer with the day? Shakespeare.

To'ward. adj. Ready to do or learn;
not froward.

To'wardliness. n. f. [from towardly.]
Docility; compliance; readiness to do or to learn.

The beauty and towardliness of these children moved her brethren to envy. Raleigh.

To'wardly. adj. [from toward.] Ready to do or learn; docile; compliant with duty.

Some young towardly noblemen or gentlemen were usually sent as assistants or attendants. Bacon.

To'wardness. n. f. [from toward.] Du-cility.

Parents will not throw away the towardness of a child, and the expense of education upon a profession, the labour of which is increased, and the rewards are vanishing. South.

To'w. n. f. [touaille, Fr. touaglio, Ital.]
A cloth on which the hands are wiped.

They with their fine soft grassy towels stand,
To wipe away the drops and moisture from her hand. Drayton.

His arm must be kept up with a napkin or towel. Wife.

Th' attendants water for their hands supply,
And, having wash'd, with flannel towels dry. Dryden.

TOW

To'w. n. f. [top, Sax. tour, Fr. torre, Ital. turris, Latin.]

1. A high building; a building raised above the main edifice.

Let us build us a city and a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven. Genesis.

Tow'rs and battlements it sees Bosom'd high in tufted trees. Milton.

He them beholding, soon
Comes down to see their city, ere the tow'r Obstruct heav'n's tow'rs. Milton.

2. A fortress; a citadel.
A strong tower from the enemy. Psalms.

3. A high headress.
Lay trains of amorous intrigues
In towers, and curls, and periwigs. Hudibras.

4. High flight; elevation.
To To'w. v. n. To soar; to fly or rise high.

On th' other side an high rock tower'd still. Spenser.

No marvel
My lord protector's hawk do tower so well. Shakespeare.

Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd
Fold above fold, a surging maze. Milton.

Tow'ring his height, and ample was his breast. Dryden.

The crooked plough, the share, the tow'ring height
Of waggons, and the cart's unwieldy weight;
These all must be prepar'd. Dryden.

All those sublime thoughts which tower above the clouds, and reach as high as heaven itself, take their rise not one jot beyond those ideas which sense or reflection have offered for the contemplation of the mind. Locke.

To'wer-mustard. n. f. [turritis, Lat.]
A plant. Miller.

To'wered. adj. [from tower.] Adorned which I had found, following an acquaintance of mine at the plough. Shakespeare.

They exchange for knives, glasses, and such toys, great abundance of gold and pearl. Abbot.

Because of old
Thou thyself don't dilt on womankind, admiring
Their shape, their colour, and attractive grace:
None are, thou think'st, but taken with such toys. Milton.

O virtue! virtue! what art thou become,
That men should leave thee for that toy a woman! Dryden.

2. A plaything; a bauble.

To dally thus with death is no fit toy:
Go find some other play-fellows, mine own sweet boy. Spenser.

What a profusion of wealth laid out in coaches, trappings, tables, cabinets, and the like precious toys! Addison.

In Delia's hand this toy is fatal found,
Nor could that fabled dart more surely wound. Pope.

We smile at florits, we despise their joy,
And think their hearts enamour'd of a toy. Young.

3. Matter of no importance.

'Tis a cockle, or a walnut shell,
A knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap. Shakespeare.

High and noble things I slightly may not tell,
Nor light and idle toys my lines may vainly sell. Drayton.

4. Folly; trifling practice; silly opinion.

The things which so long experience of all ages hath confirmed and made profitable, let us not presume to condemn as follies and toys, because we sometimes know not the cause and reason of them. Hobbes.

5. May; sport; amorous dalliance.
Ye sons of Venice, play your sports at will;
For gladsome pleasure, careless of your toys,
Shake more upon her paradise of joys.
So said he, and forbore not glance or toy
Of amorous intent. Spenser.
Milton.

6. Odd story; silly tale.

He allows the soul power to trace images on the brain, and perceive them. Locke.

His pen can trace out a true quotation. Swift.

4. To walk over.

Men, as they trace,
Both feet and face one way are wont to lead. Spenser.

We do trace this alley up and down. Shakspere.

TRACER, n. f. [from trace.] One that traces.

Ambassadors should not be held the tracers of a plot of such malice. Howell.

TRACK, n. f. [trac, old Fr. traccia, Ital.]

1. Mark left upon the way by the foot, or otherwise.

Following the track of Satan. Milton.
Hang by the neck and hair, and dragg'd around,
The hostile spear yet sticking in his wound,
With tracks of blood inscrib'd the dusty ground. Dryden.

Consider the exterior frame of the globe, if we may find any tracks or footsteps of wisdom in its constitution. Bentley.

2. A road; a beaten path.

With track oblique sidelong he works his way. Milton.

Behold Torquatus the same track pursue,
And next, the two devoted Decu view. Dryden.

To TRACK, v. a. [from the noun.] To follow by the footsteps or marks left in the way.

As shepherd's cur that in dark evening's shade
Hath tracked forth some savage beast's tread. Spenser.

He was not only a professed imitator of Horace, but a learned plagiarist in all the others; you track him every where in their flow. Dryden.

TRACKLESS, adj. [from track.] Untrodden; marked with no footsteps.

Lost in trackless fields of burning day,
Unable to discern the way.

Which Nafau's virtue only could explore. Pope.

How'n ladies nothing from thy view,
Nor the deep tract of hell. Milton.

2. A region; a quantity of land.

Only there are some tracts which, by high mountains, are barred from air and fresh wind. Raleigh.

Monte Citorio, by Homer called Intula, tract, is a very high mountain joined to the main land by a narrow tract of earth. Addison.

3. Continuity; any thing protracted, or drawn out to length.

The myrtle flourisheth still; and wonderful it is, that for so long a tract of time she should still continue fresh. Howell.

Your bodies may at last turn all to spirit,
Improv'd by tract of time, and wing'd ascend Ethereal as we. Milton.

As in tract of speech a dubious word is easily known by the coherence with the rest, and a dubious letter by the whole word; so may a deaf person, having competent knowledge of language, by an acute sagacity, by some more evident word discerned by his eye, know the sense. Holder.

4. Course; manner of process; unless it means, in this place, rather, discourse; explanation.

The tract of every thing
Would, by a good discourse, lose some life
Which action's self was tongue to. Shakspere.

5. It seems to be used by Shakspere for tract.

The weary sun hath made a golden set,
And, by the bright tract of his fiery car,
Gives signal of a goodly day to-morrow. Shaksp.

The church clergy at that time writ the best collection of tracts against popery that ever appeared. Swift.

TRACTABLE, adj. [tractabilis, Lat. tractable, French.]

1. Manageable; docile; compliant; obsequious; practicable; governable.

For moderation of those affections growing from the very natural bitterness and gall of adversity, the scripture much allegeth contrary fruit, which affliction likewise hath, whensoever it falleth on them that are tractable, the grace of God's holy spirit concurring therewith. Hooker.

Tractable obedience is a slave
To each invented will. Shakspere.

If thou dost find him tractable to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons;
If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou so too. Shakspere.

As those who are bent to do wickedly will never want tempters to urge them on in an evil course; so those who yield themselves tractable to good motions, will find the spirit of God more ready to encourage them. Tillotson.

If a strict hand be kept over children from the beginning, they will in that age be tractable, and quietly submit. Locke.

2. Palpable; such as may be handled.

The other measures are of continued quantity visible, and for the most part tractable; whereas time is always transient, neither to be seen nor felt. Holder.

TRACTABleness, n. f. [from tractable.]

The state of being tractable; compliance; obsequiousness.

It will be objected, that whatsoever I fancy of children's tractableness, yet many will never apply. Locke.

TRACTABLY, adv. In a tractable manner; gently.

TRACTATE, n. f. [tractatus, Latin.] A treatise; a tract; a small book.

Many divines of our own nation, in serious and written tractates of the sabbath, and in their explications of the fourth commandment, maintain the tractate position. White.

Though philosophical tractates make enumeration of authors, yet are then tedious usually introduced. Brown.

We need no other evidence than Glanville's tractate. Hale.

TRACTILE, adj. [tractilis, Latin.] Capable to be drawn out or extended in length; ductile.

The consistencies of bodies are very divers; tractile, tough; flexible, malleable, tractile, or to be drawn forth in length, tractile. Bacon.

TRACTILITY, n. f. [from tractile.] The quality of being tractile.

Silver, whose ductility and tractility are much inferior to those of gold, was drawn out to so slender a wire, that a single gram amounted to twenty seven feet. DeLam.

TRACTION, n. f. [from tractus, Latin.]

The act of drawing; the state of being drawn.

The malleus being fixed to an extensible membrane, follows the traction of the malleus, and is drawn inwards to bring the trams of that line nearer in proportion as it is curved, and to give a tension to the tympanum. Holder.

TRADE, n. f. [tratta, Italian.]

1. Traffick; commerce; exchange of goods for other goods, or for money.

Whoever commands the sea, commands the trade; whoever commands the trade of the world, commands the riches of the world, and consequently the world itself. Raleigh.

Trade increases in one place, and decays in another. Temple.

2. Occupation; particular employment, whether manual or mercantile, distinct.

quished from the liberal arts or learned professions.

Appoint to every one that is not able to live of his freehold a constant trade of life, which trade he shall be bound to follow. Spenser

How ditty! half-way down
Hangs one that gathers sulphure, dreadful trade! Shakespeare

'Till mountebank their loves, and come home be-liev'd Shakespeare

Of all the trades in Rome. Shakespeare
Fear and piety,
Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades,
Decline to your confounding contractions. Shaksp

The rude Equicola, Hunting their sport, and plaudring was their trade. Dryden

Fight under him; there's plunder to be had;
A captain to a very painful trade. Dryden
The whole division that to Mars pertains,
All traders of death, yet deal in steel for gains. Dryden

The emperor Pertinax applied himself up his youth to a gainful trade; his father, judging him fit for a better employment, had a mind to turn his education another way; the son was obtinate in pursuing for profitable a trade, a sort of merchandise of wood. Arbutnot

3. Instruments of any occupation.

The shepherd bears
His house and household goods, his trade of war,
His bow and quiver, and his trusty cur. Dryden

4. Any employment not manual; habitual exercise.

Call some of young yeas to train them up in that trade; and so fit them for weighty affairs. Bacon

5. Custom; habit; standing practice.

Thy sin's not accidental, but a trade. Shaksp

6. Formerly trade was used of domesticity, and traffick of foreign commerce.

To TRADE, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To traffick; to deal; to hold commerce.

He commanded their servants to be called, to know how much every man had gained by trading. Luke

Delos, a sacred place, grew a free port, where nations waiting with one another reloaded with their goods, and traded. Arbutnot

Maximumus traded with the Goths in the product of his estate in Thracia. Arbutnot

2. To act merely for money.

Saucy and overbold! how did you dare
To trade and traffick with Macbeth
In riddles and affairs of death? Shakespeare

3. To have a trade wind.

They on the trading flood ply tow'rd the pole. Milton

To TRADE, v. a. To sell or exchange in commerce.

They were thy merchants; they traded the persons of men and vessels of bruis in thy market. Ezekiel

TRADE-WIND, n. f. [trade and wind.] The monsoon; the periodical wind between the tropicks.

Thus to the eastern wealth through storms we go,
But now, the Cape once doubled, fear no more;
A constant trade-wind will securely blow,
And gently lay us on the spicy shore. Dryden

His were the projects of perpetuum mobilis, and of increasing the trade-wind by vast plantations of reeds. Arbutnot

Comfortable is the trade wind to the equatorial parts, without which life would be both short and grievous. Cheyne

TRA'DED, adj. [from trade.] Verfed; prac- tised.

Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes;
For villany is not without such chum:
And he long tradid in it makes it seem Like rivers of remorse and innocence. Shakespeare

Eyes and ears,
Two tradid pilots 'twixt the dangerous shores
Of will and judgment. Shakespeare

TRA

TRA'DESMAN, adj. [trade and folk.] Com- mercial; busy in traffick.

Ye tradful merchants, that with weary toll
Do seek most peevish things to make your gain,
And both the Indies of their treasure quail,
What needeth you to seek so far in vain? Spenser

TRA'DER, n. f. [from trade.]

1. One engaged in merchandise or com- merce.

Pilgrims are going to Canterbury with rich offerings, and traders riding to London with fat purses. Shakespeare

Now the victory's won,
We return to our lusts like fortunate traders.
Triumphant with spoils. Dryden

Many traders will necessitate merchants to trade for less profit, and consequently be more frugal. Child

That day traders sum up the accounts of the week. Swift

2. One long used in the methods of money- getting; a practitioner.

TRA'DESFOLK, n. f. [trade and folk.]

People employed in trades.
By his advice victuallers and tradesfolk would soon get all the money of the kingdom into their hands. Swift

TRA'DESMAN, n. f. [trade and man.] A shopkeeper. A merchant is called a trader, but not a tradesman; and it seems distinguished in Shakespeare from a man that labours with his hands.

I live by the awl, I meddle with no tradesmen's matters. Shakespeare

They rather had belied
Diffusions numbers peff'ring streets; than see
Our tradesmen's lining in their shops, and going
About their functions. Shakespeare

Order a trade thither and thence so as to find merchants and tradesmen, under colour of furnishing the colony with necessaries, may not grind
them. Bacon

Tradesmen might conjecture what doings they were like to have in their respective dealings. Graunt

M. Jourdain would not be thought a tradesman, but ordered some silk to be measured out to his partner's friends; now I give up my shop. Prior

From a plain tradesman with a shop, he is now grown a very rich country gentleman. Arbutnot

Domesticks in a gentleman's family have more opportunities of improving their minds, than the ordinary tradesmen. Swift

Boastful and rough, your first son is a squire;
The next a tradesman, weak, and much a liar. Pope

Penitens was a busy nothful tradesman, very prosperous in his dealings, but died in the thirty-fifth year of his age. Lave

TRADITION, n. f. [tradition, Fr. traditio, Latin.]

1. The act or practice of delivering ac- counts from mouth to mouth without written memorials; communication from age to age.

To learn it we have tradition; namely, that so we believe, because both we from our predecessors, and they from theirs, have so received. Hooker

2. Any thing delivered orally from age to age.

They the truth
With superstitions and traditions tint,
Left only in those written records pure. Milton

It is well known to have been a general tradition amongst these nations, that the world was made,
and had a beginning. Wilkins

Our old solemnities
From no blind zeal or fond tradition rise;
But, sav'd from death, our Argives yearly pay
These grateful honours to the god of day. Pope

TRADITIONAL, adj. [from tradition.]

1. Delivered by tradition; descending by oral communication; transmitted by the foregoing to the following age.

Whence may we have the traditionary songs or legends, &c. from the Jews of their chiefs?

If there be any difference in natural parts, it should form the advantage lies on the side of children born from wealthy parents, the more traditional cloth and luxury which render their body weak, perhaps refining their spirits. Swift

2. Obervant of traditions, or idle rules. Not used, nor proper.

God forbid
We should infringe the holy privilege
Of sanctuary! Shakespeare

You are too senseless obtinate, my lord,
Too ceremonious and traditional. Shakespeare

TRADITIONALLY, adv. [from tradi- tional.]

1. By transmission from age to age.

There is another channel wherein this doctrine is traditionally derived from St. John, namely, from the clergy of Asia. Purser

2. From tradition without evidence of written memorials.

It crosseth the proverb, and Rome might well be built in a day, if that were true which is traditionally related by Strabo, that the great cities Anchala and Tarsus were built by Sardanapalus both in one day. Bacon

TRADITIONARY, adj. [from tradition]

Delivered by tradition; transmissiv-handed down from age to age.

Suppose the same traditionary strain
Of rigid manners in the house remain,
Inveterate truth, an old plain Sabine's heart. Dryden

Oral tradition is more uncertain, especially if we may take that to be the traditionary kind of texts of scripture. Tilley

The fame of our Saviour, which in so few years had gone through the whole earth, was confirmed and perpetuated by such records as would preserve the traditionary account of him to after-ages. Ady

TRADITIVE, adj. [traditive, French, from trado, Latin.] Transmitted or transmissi- ble from age to age.

Suppose we on things traditive divide,
And both appeal to scripture to decide. Dryden

To TRADUCE, v. a. [traduco, Latin; tra- duire, French.]

1. To censure; to condemn; to represent as blamable; to calumniate; to decry.

The best stratagem that Satan hath, who knoweth his kingdom to be no one way more shaken than by the public devout prayers of God's church, is by traducing the form and manner of them, by bringing them into contempt, and so slack the force of all men's devotion towards them. Hos

Those particular ceremonies which they pretend to be so scandalous, we shall more thoroughly see when other things also traduced in the public ac-ties of the church are, together with these, to be touched. Hos

Whilst calumny has such potent abettors, we are not to wonder at its growth: as long as men are malicious and defigning, they will be traducing.

Government of the Tongue
From that preface he took his hint; though he had the business not to acknowledge his benefactor, but instead of it to traduce me in libel. Dry

2. To propagate; to increase or continue by deriving one from another.

None are so gross as to contend for this,
That souls from bodies may traduced be;
Between whose natures no proportion is.
When root and branch in nature full agree. Dun

From these only the race of perfect animals were propagated and traduced over the earth. Hos

Some believe the soul is made by God, some by angels, and some by the generant: whether it is immediately created or traduced, hath been a great ball of contention to the latter ages. Glen

TRADUCEMENT, n. f. [from traduce.]

Censure; obloquy.

Rome hath know
The value of her own: 'twere a conceitment

Or in a boat, where'er they will,
Canst make it serve, (besides a trawl)
To TRAIL, v. g. To be drawn out in length.

When his brother saw the red blood trail
A down so fast, and all his armour sleepe,
For very full loud he 'gan to weep. Spenser.
Swift, men of foot, whose broad-set backs their trailing hair did hide. Chapman.
Since the flames pursu'd the trailing smoke,
He knew his boon was granted. Dryden.
From o'er the roof the blaze began to move,
And trailing vanish'd in the ideal grove?
It swept a path in heav'n, and shew'd a guide,
Then in a flaming fench of sulphur dy'd. Dryden.

TRAIL, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Scent left on the ground by the animal purged; track followed by the hunter.
See but the issue of my jealousy: if I cry out thus upon no trail, never truit me when I open again. Shakespeare.

How cheerfully on the false trail they cry!
Oh, this is counter, you false Danish dogs. Shaksp.
I do think, or else this brain of mine
Hunts not the trail of policy so sure.
As I have us'd to do, that I have found
The very ounce of Hamlet's lunacy. Shakespeare.

2. Any thing drawn to length.
From thence the fuming trail began to spread,
And lambent glories danc'd about her head. Dryden.
When lightning shoots in glittering trails along,
It shines, 'tis true, and gilds the gloomy night;
But when it strikes, 'tis fatal. Rowe.

3. Any thing drawn behind in long undulations.
And round about her work she did empale
With a fair border wrought of lundry flow'rs,
Enwoven with an ivy winding trail. Spenser.
A sudden star it shot through liquid air,
And drew behind a radiant trail of hair. Pope.

To TRAIN, v. a. [trainer, French.]

1. To draw along.
In hollow cube he train'd
His devilish enginery. Milton.

2. To draw; to entice; to invite; to allure.
If but twelve French
Were there in arms, they would be as a call
To train ten thousand English to their side. Shaksp.

3. To draw by artifice or stratagem.
For that cause I train'd thee to my house.
Shakespeare.
Oh, train me not, sweet mermaid, with thy note!
To drown me in thy sister's flood of tears.
Sing, Syren, to thyself, and I will doat:
Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hair,
And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lie. Shaksp.

4. To draw from act to act by persuasion or promise.
We did train him on,
And his corruption being ta'en from us,
We as the spring of all shall pay for all. Shakespeare.

Of fair fallacious looks, veterer'd trains.
Soft'n'd with pleasure and voluptuous life. Milton.

Now to my charms
And to my wily trains! I shall ere long
Be well stock'd with as fair a herd as grass'd
About my mother Circe. Milton.

The practice begins of crafty men upon the simple and good; these easily follow and are caught, while the others lay trains and pursue a game. Temple.

2. The tail of a bird.

Costly followers are not to be liked, lest while a man makes his train longer he makes his wings shorter. Bacon.

Contracting their body, and being forced to draw in their fore parts to establish the hinder in the elevation of the train, if the fore parts do part and include to the ground, the hinder grow too weak, and suffer the train to fall. Brown.

The bird guideth her body with her train, and the ship is steered with the rudder. Hakewill.

Th' other, whose gay train
Adorns him colour'd with the florid hue
Of rainbows and sunny eyes. Milton.

The train steers their flights, and turns their bodies like the rudder of a ship; as the kite, by a light turning of his train, moves his body which way he pleases. Ray.

3. The part of a gown that falls behind upon the ground.

A thousand pounds a year for pure respect

own light with it, in every step of its progression, in an easy and orderly train. Locke.

If we reflect on what is observable in ourselves,
we shall find our ideas always pushing in train, one going and another coming, without intermission. Locke.

They laboured in vain so far to reach the apostle's meaning, all along in the train of what he said. Locke.

Some truths result from any ideas, as soon as the mind puts them into propositions; other truths require a train of ideas placed in order, a due comparing of them, and deduculous made with attention. Locke.

What wouldst thou have me do? consider well
The train of ills our love would draw behind it. Addison.

The author of your beings can by a glance of the eye, or a word speaking, enlighten your mind, and conduct you to a train of happy sentiments. Watts.

5. Process; method; state of procedure.
If things were once in this train, if virtue were established as necessary to reputation, and vice not only loaded with infamy, but made the infallible ruin of all men's pretensions, our duty would take root in our nature. Swift.

6. A retinue; a number of followers or attendants.

My train are men of choice and rarest parts,
That in the most exact regard support
The worship of their names. Shakespeare.

Our fire walks forth, without more train
Accompany'd than with his own complete Perfections. Milton.

Thou shouldst be seen
A goddess among gods, ador'd, and serv'd
By angels numberless, thy daily train. Milton.

He comes not with a train to move our fear. Dryden.

The king's daughter, with a lovely train
Of fellow nymphs, was sporting on the plain. Addison.

In lolly madness, meditating long. Pope.

TRAIT, n. f. [trait, French.] A stroke
a touch. Scarce English.

By this single trait Homer marks an effect difference between the dead and the living; that the former the people perished by the folly of the kings; in this, by their own folly. Brown.

TRAITOR, n. f. [traitre, French; traditor, Latin.] One who being truth-betray.

The law laid that grievous punishment upon traitors, to forfeit all their lands to the prince, so men might be terrified from committing treason. Spenser.

If you flatter him, you are a great traitor to humanity. Locke.

I'll put him thus far into the plot, that he shall be secured as a traitor; but when I am out of it, he shall be released. Dryden.

There is no difference, in point of morality, between a man calls me traitor in one word, or says am one hired to betray my religion, and sell my country. Locke.

TRAITORLY, adj. [from traitor.] Treacherous; perfidious.

These traitorly respects' miseries are to be found at, their offences being so capital. Shakespeare.

TRAITOROUS, adj. [from traitor.] Treacherous; perfidious; faithless.

What news with him, that traitorous night? Dryden.

Postings knows not you,
While you stand out upon these treacherous terms.

The traitorous or treacherous, who have misled others, he would have severely punished, and the neutrals noted.

More of his majesty's friends have lost their lives in this rebellion than of his traitorous subjects.

TRAITOROUSLY. adv. [from traitorous.] In a manner suiting traitors; perfidiously; treacherously.

Good duke Humphry traitorously is murder'd By Suffolk.

Thou bitter sweet! whom I had laid Next me, me traitorously hast betray'd; And unsuspected half invisibly At once fled into him, and stay'd with me.

I am to make often transcurfions into the neighbouring forests as I pass along. Howel.

If man were out of the world, who were then left to view the face of heaven, to wonder at the transcurfion of comets? More.

TRANSE. n. s. [transé, French. See TRACE.] A temporary absence of the soul; an ecstasy.

Abstract as in a transé, methought I saw, Though sleeping, where I lay, and saw the shape Still glorious before whom awake I stood. Milton.

TRANSELEMENTATION. n. s. [trans and element.] Change of one element into another.

But we allow; but if they suppose any other transselementation, it neither agrees with Moses's philosophy nor St. Peter's. Barnet.

TRANSEXION. n. s. [trans and sexus, Lat.] Change from one sex to another.

It much impedeth the iterated transseion of bates, if that be true which some physicians affirm, that transmutation of sexes was only so in opinion, and that those transseminated persons were really men at first. Brown.

To TRANSFER. v. a. [transferer, French; transfere, Latin.]

1. To convey; to make over from one to another: with to, sometimes with upon.

He that transfers the laws of the Lacedæmonians to the people of Athens, should find a great absurdity and inconvenience. Spenser.

Was't not enough you took my crown away, But cruelly you must my love betray?

I was well pleas'd to have transfer'd my right, And better chang'd your claim of lawless might. Dryden.

The King, Who from himself all envy would remove, Left both to be determin'd by the laws, And to the Grecian chiefs transferr'd the cause. Dryden.

This was one perverse effect of their sitting at ease under their vines and fig-trees, that they forgot from whence that ease came, and transferred all the honour of it upon themselves. Atterbury.

Your sacred aid religious monarchs own, When first they merit, then ascend the throne: But tyrants drag you, left your just decree Transfer the power, and set the people free. Prior.

By tending we learn not only the actions and the sentiments of distant nations, but transfer to ourselves the knowledge and improvements of the most learned men. Watts.

2. To remove; to transport.

The king was much moved with this unexpected accident, because it was stirred in such a place where he could not with safety transfer his own person to suppress it. Bacon.

He thirty rolling years the crown shall wear, Then from Lavinium shall the seat transfer. Dryden.

TRANSFER. n. s. A change of property; a delivery of property to another.

TRANSFERER. n. s. He that transfers.

TRANSFIGURATION. n. s. [transfiguration, French.]

1. Change of form.

In kinds where the discrimination of sexes is obscure, these transformations are more common, and in some, without commixture; as in caterpillars or silkworms, wherein there is a visible and triple transfiguration. Brown.

2. The miraculous change of our blessed Saviour's appearance on the mount.

It cannot be expected that other authors should mention particulars which were transfused amongst some of the disciples; such as the transfiguration and the agony in the garden. Addison.

Did Raphael's pencil ever chuse to fall?

Say, are his works transfigurations all? Blackmore.

To TRANSFIGURE. v. a. [transfigurer, French; trans and figura, Latin.] To transform; to change with respect to outward appearance.

I am the more anxious to transfigure your love into devotion, because I have observed your passion to have been extremely impatient of confinement. Boyle.

The nuptial right his outrage frant attends, The dow'r desired is his transfigur'd friends: The incantation backward the repeats, Inverts her rod, and what she did defeats. Garth.

To TRANSFIX. v. a. [transfixus, Latin.] To pierce through.

Amongst these mighty men were women mingled; The bold Semiramis, whose sides transfix'd With son's own blade, her soul reproaches spoke. Spenser.

What beast couldst thou be, that were not subject to a beast?

And what a beast art thou already, and seek not thy loss in transformation! Shakespeare.

The mensuration of all manner of curves, and their mutual transformation, are not worth the labour of those who design either of the three learned professions. Watts.

TRANSFRETATION. n. s. [trans and fretum, Latin.] Passage over the sea.

Since the last transfection of king Richard the second, the crown of England never sent over numbers of men sufficient to defend the smallest territory. Darwin.

To TRANSFUSE. v. a. [transfusus, Lat.]

To pour out of one into another.

Between men and beasts there is no possibility of social communion; because the well-spring of that communion is a natural delight which man hath to transfuse from himself into others, and to receive from others into himself, especially those things wherein the excellency of his kind doth most consist. Hooker.

Transfus'd on thee his ample spirit rests. Milton.

When did his muse from Fletcher's veins purine, As thou whose Eth'ridge drink which man hath to But to transfuse, as oil and waters flow, His always floats above, thine links below. Dryden.

Where the juices are in a morbid state, it one could suppose all the unfound juices taken away, and found juices immediately transfused, the found juices would grow morbid. Arbuthnot.

TRANSFUSION. n. s. [transfusio, French; transfusio, Latin.] The act of pouring out of one into another.

The crooked part of the pipe was placed in a box, to prevent the loss of the quicksilver that might fall aside in the transfusion from the vessel into the pipe. Boyle.

Poetry is of so subtle a spirit, that in the pouring out of one language into another it will all evaporate; and if a new spirit be not added in the transfusion, there will remain nothing but a caput mortuum. Denham.

Something must be lost in all transfusion, that is, in all translations, and the sense will remain. Dryden.

What noise have we had about transplantation of diseases, and transfusion of blood! Baker.

To TRANSGRESS. v. a. [transgresser, Fr. transgressus, Latin.]

1. To pass over; to pass beyond.

Long stood the noble youth oppress'd with awe,
And rapid at the wheel of things he flew,
Surpassing common faith, transgressing nature's law,
Dryden.

2. To violate; to break.

Let no man doubt but that every thing is well done, because the world is ruled by so good a guide as transgresseth not his own law, than which nothing can be more absolute, perfect, and just. Hooker.
This forrow we must repeat as often as we trans-
gress the divine commandments. Wake.

To TRANSGRESS. v. n. To offend by vio- lating a law.

I would not marry her, though she were endowed with all Adam had left him before he trans- gressed. Shakspeare.

He upbraideth us with our offending the law, and objecteth to our infamy the transgressings of our education. Wyldon.

TRANSGRESSION. n. f. [transgression, Fr.
from transgreſs.]

1. Violation of a law; breach of a com- mand.

Shall I abuse this consecrated gift
Of strength, again returning with my hair
After my great transgression: to requite Favour renew'd, and add a greater sin? Milton.

All accusation still is founded upon some law, for where there is no law, there can be no trans- gression; and where there can be no transgreſ- sion, there ought to be no accusation. South.

2. Offence; crime; fault.

What's his fault?
—The flat transgression of a school-boy, who,
being overjoyed with finding a bird's nest, shows it his companion, and he steals it.

—Wilt thou make a trait transgression? The transgression is in the stealer. Shakspeare.

Teach us, sweet madam, for our rude transgreſ-
sion,
Some fair excuse. Shakspeare.

TRANSGRESSIVE. adj. [from transgreſs.]
Faulty; culpable; apt to break laws.

Though permitted unto his proper principles,
Adam perhaps would have sinned without the suggestion of Satan, and from the transgressive infirmities of himself might have erred alone, as well as the angels before him. Brown.

TRANSGRESSOR. n. f. [transgressor, Fr. from transgreſs.] Lawbreaker; violator of command; offender.

He intended the discipline of the church should be applied to the greatest and most splendid trans- gressor, as well as to the punishment of manner offenders. Clarendon.

I go to judge
On earth these thy transgressors; but thou know'st
Whoever judg'd, the worst on me must light
When time shall be. Milton.

Ill worthy I, such title should belong
To me transgressor! who, for these ordain'd
A help, became thy sure. Milton.

TRANSIENT. adj. [transiens, Latin.]
Soon past; soon passing; short; momen- tary; not lasting; not durable.

How soon hath thy prediction, fear blest!
Measur'd this transient world, the race of time,
Till time stand fix'd. Milton.

He that rides post through a country, may, from the transient view, tell how in general the parts lie.
Locke.

Love, hitherto a transient guest,
Ne'er held possession in his breast. Swift.

What is loose love? a transient guest,
A vapour fed from wild desire. Pope.

TRANSIENTLY. adv. [from transient.] In passage; with a short passage; not with continuance.

I touch here but transiently, without any strict method, on some few of those many rules of limiting nature which Aristotle drew from Homer.
Dryden.

TRANSIENTNESS. n. f. [from transient.]
Shortness of continuance; speedy passage.

It were to be wished that all words of this sort,
as they resemble the wind in fury and impetuousness, so they might do also in transientness and sudden expiration. Decay of Piety.

TRANSILIENCY. } n. f. [from transilio,
TRANSILIENCY. } Latin.] Leap from thing to thing.

By an unadvised transiliency from the effect to the remotest cause, we observe not the connection, through the interposal of more immediate causal-ties. Glanville.

TRANSIT. n. f. [transitus, Latin.] In astronomy, the passing of any planet just by or under any fixed star; or of the moon covering or moving close by any other planet. Harris.

TRANSITION. n. f. [transitio, Latin.]

1. Removal; passage from one to another.
Heat and cold have a virtual transition without communication of substance, but moisture not.
Bacon.

As for the mutation of sexes, and transition into one another, we cannot deny it in hares, it being observable in man. Brown.

I have given some intimations of the changes which happen in the interior parts of the earth, I mean the transitions and removes of metals and minerals there. Woodward.

2. Change; mode of change.

The spots are of the same colour throughout,
there being an immediate transition from white to black, and not declining gradually, and mixing as they approach. Woodward.

You can scarce imagine any hero passing from one stage of life to another with so easy a transition, and so laudable a behaviour. Pope.

As once inclin'd in woman's beautiful mould;
Thence, by a soft transition we repair
From earthly vehicles to these of air. Pope.

3. [transition, French.] Passage in writing or conversation from one subject to an- other.

He with transition sweet new speech resumes.
Milton.

Covetousness was none of his faults, but detested as a veil over the true meaning of the poet, which was to satirize his prodigality and voluptuousness, to which he makes a transition. Dryden.

TRANSITIVE. adj. [transitivus, Latin.]

1. Having the power of passing.

Our cause of cold is the contact of cold bodies;
for cold is active and transitive into bodies adjacent,
as well as heat. Bacon.

2. In grammar.

A verb transitive is that which signifies an action,
conceived as having an effect upon some object,
as ferio terram, I strike the earth. Clarke.

TRANSITORIALLY. adv. [from transitory.]

With speedy evanescence; with short continuance.

TRANSITORINESS. n. f. [from transitory.]
Speedy evanescence.

TRANSITORY. adj. [transitoire, French;
transitorius, from transio, Latin.] Continuing but a short time; speedily vanishing.

O Lord, comfort and succour all them who in this transitory life are in trouble. Common Prayer.
If we love things have taught; age is a thing
Which we are fifty years in compassing;
If transitory things, which soon decay,
Age must be loveliest at the last day. Donne.

Religion prefers those pleasures which flow from the presence of God evermore, infinitely before the transitory pleasures of this world. Tillotson.

To TRANSLATE. v. n. [translatum, Lat.]

1. To transport; to remove.

Since our father is translated unto the gods, our will is, that they that are in our realm live quietly.
2 Maccabees.

By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death. Hebrews.

Those argon lights
Translated saints or middle spirits hold. Milton.

Of the same soil their nursery prepare
With that of their plantation, lo! the tree
Translated should not with the soil agree. Dryden.

The gods their shapes to winter birds translate,
But both obnoxious to their former fate. Dryden.

To go to heaven is to be translated to that kingdom you have longed for; to enjoy the glories of eternity. Wake.

2. It is particularly used of the removal of a bishop from one see to another.

Fisher, bishop of Rochester, when the king would have translated him from that poor bishopric to a better, he refused, saying, he would not forsake his poor little old wife, with whom he had so long lived. Camden.

3. To transfer from one to another; to convey.

I will translate the kingdom from the house of Saul, and set up the throne of David. 2 Samuel.

Lucian affirms the souls of virtuous, after their death, to be metamorphosed, or translated into the bodies of asses, there to remain for poor men to take their pennyworths out of their bones and sides with the cudgel and spur. Peacock.

As there are apoplexies from inveterate gout, the regimen must be to translate the morbid matter upon the extremities of the body. Arbuthnot.

Perverse mankind! who's will, created free,
Charge all their woes on absolute decree;
All to the dooming gods their guilt translate,
And tollies are miscall'd the crimes of fate. Pope.

4. To change.

One do I personate of Timon's frame,
Whom fortune with her iv'ry hand wasts to her,
Whose present grace to present slaves and servants
Translates his rivals. Shakspeare.

Happy is your grace,
That can translate the inbornness of fortune
Into so quiet and so sweet a style. Shakspeare.

5. [translator, old French.] To interpret in another language; to change into an- other language retaining the sense.

I can construe the action of her familiar file, and the hardest voice of her behaviour, to be englished right, in, I am fir John Falstaff's.
—He hath studied her well, and translated her out of homely into English. Shakspeare.

Nor word for word too faithfully translate.
Recommon.

Read this ere you translate one bit
Of books of high renown. Swift.

We're it mount that in despite
Of art and nature such dull clouds should write, Navius and Mavius had been sav'd by late
For Settle and for Shadwell to translate. Duke.

6. To explain. A low colloquial use.

There's matter in these lights, these profound heaves
You must translate; 'tis fit we understand them.
Shakspeare.

TRANSLATION. n. f. [translatio, Latin;
translation, French.]

1. Removal; act of removing.

His disease was an asthma; the cause, a metastasis or translation of humours from his joints to his lungs. Harvey.

Translations of morbid matter arise in acute dilempters. Arbuthnot.

2. The removal of a bishop to another see.

If part of the people be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or cyphers in the privation or translation. Bacon.

The king, the next time the bishop of London came to him, entertained him with this compella-tion, My lord's grace of Canterbury, you are very welcome; and gave order for all the necessary forms for the translation. Clarendon.

3. The act of turning into another lan- guage; interpretation.

A book of his travels hath been honoured with translation into many languages. Brown.

Not ought a genius less than his that writ,
Attempt translation; for transplanted wit
All the defects of air and soil doth lose,
And colder brains like colder climates are.

Denham.

4. Something made by translation; version.
Of translations, the better I acknowledge that which cometh nearer to the very letter of the very original verity.

Hooker.

TRANSLATIVE. adj. [translativus, Latin.]
Taken from others.

TRANSLATOR. n. s. [translatur, old Fr.
from translat.] One that turns any thing into another language.

A new and nobler way thou dost pursue,
To make translations and translators too.

Denham.

No translation our own country ever yet produced, both come up to that of the Old and New Testament; and I am persuaded, that the translators of the bible were masters of an English stile much fitter for that work than any we see in our present writings, the which is owing to the simplicity that runs through the whole.

Swift.

TRANSLATORY. n. s. [from translat.]
Transferring.

The translatory is a lie that transfers the merits of a man's good action to another more deserving.

Arbutnot.

TRANSLOCATION. n. s. [trans and locus, Latin.] Removal of things reciprocally to each other's places.

There happened certain translocations at the deluge, the matter constituting animal and vegetable substances being dissolved, and mineral matter substituted in its place, and thereby like translocation of metals in some springs.

Woodward.

TRANSLUCENCY. n. s. [from translucent.]
Diaphaneity; transparency.

Lumps of rock crystal heated red hot, then quenched in fair water, exchanged their translu-cency for whiteness, the ignition and extinction having cracked each lump into a multitude of minute bodies.

Boyle.

TRANSLUCENT. } adj. [trans and lucens, TRANSLUCID. } or lucidus, Latin.]

Transparent; diaphanous; clear; giving a passage to the light.

In angels the spirits ascend and wax eager; which is seen in the eyes, because they are translucent.

Bacon.

Wherever fountain or fresh current flow'd
Against the eastern ray, translucent, pure,
With touch æthereal of heav'n's fiery rod,
I drink.

Milton.

The golden ewer a maid obsequious brings,
Replenish'd from the cool translucent springs.

Pope.

TRANSMARINE. adj. [transmarinus, Lat.]

Lying on the other side of the sea;
found beyond sea.

She might have made herself mistress of Timau-rania, her next transmarine neighbour.

Howell.

To TRANSMUTE. v. a. [transmut, Latin;
transmuer, French.] To transmute; to transform; to metamorphose; to change.
Obsolete.

When him list the rascal routs appall,
Men into stones the wreath he could transmute,
And stones to dust, and dust to nought at all.

Spenser.

TRANSMIGRANT. adj. [transmigrans, Lat.]

Passing into another country or state.

Besides an union in sovereignty, or a conjunction in pact, there are other implicit confederations, that of colonies or transmigrants towards their mother nation.

Bacon.

To TRANSMIGRATE. v. n. [transmigro, Latin.] To pass from one place or country into another.

This complexion is maintained by generation;
so that strangers contract it not, and the natives which transmigrate omit it not without commix-ture.

Brown.

If Pythagoras's transmutation were true, that the souls of men transmute into species answering their former nature, some men must live over many servants.

Brown.

Their souls may transmigrate into each other.
Howell.

Regard

The port of Luns, says our learned bard;
Who, in a drunken dream, beheld his soul
The fifth within the transmigrating roll.

Dryden.

TRANSMIGRATION. n. s. [transmigration, French, from transmigrare.] Passage from one place or state into another.

The sequel of the conjunction of natures in the person of Christ is no abolishment of natural properties appertaining to either in stance, no transition or transmigration thereof out of one substance into another.

Hooker.

Seeing the earth of itself puts forth plants without seed, plants may well have a transmigration of species.

Bacon.

From the opinion of the metempsychosis, or transmigration of the souls of men into the bodies of beasts, most suitable unto their human condition, after his death, Orpheus the musician became a swan.

Brown.

Tasting their passage hence, for microcosm
Of transmigration, as their lot shall lead.

Milton.

'Twas taught by wife Pythagoras,
One soul might through more bodies pass:
Seeing such transmigration there,

Denham.

She thought it not a tale here.

When thou wert torn'd, how did a man begin,
But the brute soul by chance was snail'd in:

In woods and wilds thy monarchy maintain,
Where valiant beasts by force and rapine reign,
In life's next scene, if transmigration be,
Some bear or lion is reserv'd for thee.

Dryden.

TRANSMISSION. n. s. [transmission, Fr.
transmissus, Latin.] The act of sending from one place to another, or from one person to another.

If there were any such notable transmission of a colony hither out of Spain, the very chronicles of Spain would not have omitted to memorate a thing.

Spenser.

Operations by transmission of spirits is one of the highest secrets in nature.

Bacon.

In the transmission of the sea-water into the pits,
the water riseth; but in the transmission of the water through the vessels, it falleth.

Bacon.

These move swiftly; but then they require a medium well disposed, and their transmission is easily stopped.

Bacon.

The eye has a muscular power, and can dilate and contract that round hole in it called the pupil, for the better moderating the transmission of light.

More.

Languages of countries are lost by transmission of colonies of a different language.

Hale.

An inquiry will be of use, as a parallel discovery of the transmission of the English laws into Scotland.

Hale.

Their reflexion or transmission depends on the constitution of the air and water behind the glass, and not the striking of the rays upon the parts of the glass.

Newton.

TRANSMISSIVE. adj. [from transmissus, Latin.] Transmitted; derived from one to another.

And still the fire communicates to his son
Transmissive lessons of the king's renown.

Prior.

Itself a sun; it with transmissive light
Enlivens worlds deny'd to human sight.

Prior.

Then grateful Greece with streaming eyes would raise

Historic marbles to record his praise;
His praise eternal, on the faithful stone,
Had with transmissive honour grac'd his son.

Pope.

To TRANSMIT. v. a. [transmitto, Latin;
transmettre, French.] To send from one person or place to another.

By means of writing, former ages transmit the memorials of ancient times and things to posterity.

Hale.

He sent orders to his friend in Spain to sell his estate, and transmit the money to him.

Addison.

Thus flourish'd love, and beauty reign'd in state,
Till the proud Spaniard gave this glory's date:
Past is the gallantry, the same remains.

Transmitted tale in Dryden's lofty verses.
Shine forth, ye planets, with distinguish'd light;
Again transmit your friendly beams to earth,
As when Britannia joy'd for Anna's birth.

Prior.

TRANSMITTAL. n. s. [from transmit.]
The act of transmitting; transmission.
I know not that this word has any authority.

Besides the transmittal to England of two-thirds of the revenues of Ireland, they make our country a receptacle for their superannuated pretenders to offices.

Swift.

TRANSMITTER. n. s. [from transmit.] One that transmits.

TRANSMUTABLE. adj. [transmutabilis, Fr.
from transmute.] Capable of change;
possible to be changed into another nature or substance.

It is no easy matter to demonstrate that air is so much as convertible into water; how transmutable
it is unto flesh may be of deeper doubt.

Brown.

The fluids and solids of an animal body are easily transmutable into one another.

Arbutnot.

TRANSMUTABLY. adv. [from transmute.]
With capacity of being changed into another substance or nature.

TRANSMUTATION. n. s. [transmutation,
French; transmutatio, from transmut,
Latin.]

1. Change into another nature or substance.

The great aim of alchemy is the trans-mutation of base metals into gold.

Am not I old Sly's son, by birth a pedlar, by education a card-maker, by transmutation a bear-herd?

Shakespeare.

The transmutation of plants one into another, is intermingling nature, for the transmutation of species is, in the vulgar philosophy, pronounced impossible; but seeing there appear some manifest instances of it, the opinion of impossibility is to be rejected, and the means thereof to be found out.

Bacon.

The conversion into a body merely new, and which was not before, as silver to gold, or iron to copper, is better called, for distinction sake, trans-mutation.

Bacon.

The changing of bodies into light, and light into bodies, is very conformable to the course of nature, which seems delighted with transmutations. Water, which is a very fluid and delicate salt, the changes by heat into vapour, which is a sort of air, and by cold into ice, which is a hard, pellucid, brittle, insi-lable stone; and this stone returns into water by heat, and vapour returns into water by cold.

Newton.

The supposed change of worms into flies is no real transmutation; but most of those members, which at last become visible to the eye, are existent at the beginning, artificially complicated together.

Bentley.

2. Successive change. Not proper.

The same hand successively sundry transmutations of owners within one term.

Bacon.

To TRANSMUTE. v. n. [transmut, Latin;
transmuer, Fr.] To change from one nature or substance to another.

Suidas thinks, that by the golden fleece was meant a golden book of parchment, which is of sheep's skin, and therefore called golden, because it was taught therein how other metals might be transmuted.

Raleigh.

That metals may be transmuted one into another, I am not satisfied of the fact.

Ray.

TRANSMUTER. n. s. [from transmut.] One that transmutes.

TRANSON. n. s. [transenna, Lat.]

1. A thwart beam or lintel over a door.

TRANSPARENCY. n. s. [transparence, Fr.
from transparent.] Clearness; diapha-neity; translucency; power of transmitting light.

A set of another nation would not have dwelt so long upon the clearness and transparency of the stream; but in Italy one seldom sees a river that is extremely bright and limpid, most of them being muddy.

Another cause is the greater transparency of the vessels, occasioned by the thinness and delicacy of their coats.

TRANSPARENT. adj. [transparent, Fr. trans and appareo, Lat.] Pervious to the light; clear; pellucid; diaphanous; translucent; not opaque.

Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright, Through the transparent bosom of the deep.

As doth thy face through tears of mine give light: Thus 'tis in every tear that I do weep.

Wait upon him with whom you speak with your eye; for there be many wise men that have secret hearts and transparent countenances.

Each thought was visible that roll'd within, As through a crystal case the figur'd homs are seen; And heav'n did this transparent veil provide,

Because she had no guilely thought to hide. Her bosom appeared all of crystal, and so wonderfully transparent, that I saw every thought in her heart.

Transparent forms, too fine for mortal sight, Their fluid bodies half dissolv'd in light.

TRANSPICUOUS. adj. [trans and specio, Latin.] Transparent; pervious to the sight.

What if that light, sent from her through the wide transpicuous air, In the terrestrial moon be as a star?

Now thy wine's transpicuous, purg'd from all earthly gross; yet let it ice awhile in the fat refuse.

To TRANSPERCE. v. n. [transpercer, Fr. trans and percer.] To penetrate; to make way through; to permeate.

A mind which through each part infus'd doth pass, Fashions and works, and wholly doth transperce

Ad this great body of the universe. His careful spirit, which, biding as it flows, Peers'd through the yielding, pliant, jointed wood, the idea transperce'd return a rattling sound, And groans in Greek's inclosed came clanging through the wound.
